Two recently released movies, The Holdovers and American Fiction, have something local in common – they both contain scenes filmed in the Parkway area. Caution: the following article may contain mild spoilers.

American Fiction, starring Jeffrey Wright and Tracee Ellis Ross, is a movie about a frustrated novelist who's tired of the establishment that profits from Black entertainment steeped in offensive tropes. The movie was named one of the top ten films of 2023 by the American Film Institute and has received many awards, including two nominations for Golden Globes and five nominations at the Critics' Choice Awards, including Best Picture. The movie was filmed in September 2022.

The interior of a Victorian house on Bellevue Street in West Roxbury was used as the home of the main characters. "The set was great – lots of interior work. The special part is how the local community and our own union were working on this film," remarked Shadya Ballug, who worked as a Set Decorator on American Fiction. She explained that most of the shots of the house were interior, except for a few quick transition scenes that took place outside.

The cast and crew sometimes had difficulty fitting into the narrow hallways of the Victorian home. Santino Tartaglia, who worked in the sound department, explained that the classic and unique interior of the home was key to the plot of the movie.

"Normally, a house of this style and size would be reserved for a certain character type in the media," Tartaglia said. "American Fiction made excellent use of this house in the breaking of that mold. We see wealth and affluence in the walls and on the banister of the house. But, with the set decorations, we also see a family history within the home. So we have this huge stylish home that has been in one family for generations. It looks old, like old money. And that family is Black. It shouldn't be a big deal, but it is. Both in the real world, but also in the story," Tartaglia explained.

Ballug and Tartaglia both remarked that the neighborhood was welcoming and friendly to the film crew, and they enjoyed walking to Centre Street to try the local eateries during her lunch break. Tartaglia especially liked Delini Gelato, which is on the same street as the Victorian home.

The Holdovers, starring Paul Giamatti, is a film about a teacher at a New England prep school who stays on campus during Christmas break to babysit a handful of students. The instructor, played by Giamatti, forms an unlikely bond with one of his troubled scholars. The film takes place in December 1970. About halfway through the film, Parkway residents may recognize a familiar setting in a restaurant scene – the renowned Pleasant Cafe. The landmark cafe's vintage interior is the perfect spot to film a period piece.

Roslindale meets Squares + Streets

The Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) met with about 30 Roslindale community leaders, business owners and residents at the Roslindale Branch of the Boston Public Library on Monday for an informal discussion on what the Squares + Streets Program will look like. The program is a rezoning effort focusing on city squares and business corridors to increase housing density where neighborhoods consider appropriate, or potentially decrease density if deemed necessary.

BPDA Director James Arthur Jemison said that's mainly up to Roslindalites. And he announced then that Roslindale will be one of the first areas to really begin and ramp up the Squares + Streets process.

"The process is a path through which we've identified a large number of density options for the squares in partnership with you in which you

Pepén peppered with Squares + Streets concerns

Matthew MacDonald

The Hyde Park Neighborhood Association (HPNA) held its monthly meeting on Thursday, Jan. 4. It drew about 20 people and ran just over an hour.

Enrique Pepén, the new District 5 city councilor, was the featured guest. In his brief remarks, the Roslindale resident – who had made multiple appearances before different Hyde Park neighborhood groups during his winning campaign – revisited past talking points as he touched on his background in public policy and constituent services.

During the Q&A that followed, however, the councilor – who took office on Jan. 1 – was plunged into the present to address a citywide zoning override proposal that has been moving through the community process since early December, and that is scheduled to wrap up in early February before continuing on to the Zoning Board of Appeal (ZBA).

Squares + Streets (S+S) opened the 40 minute Q&A and took up more than half of it.

This new citywide planning and zoning initiative is being proposed by the Boston

Planning & Development Agency (BPDA). As stated on the BPDA's S+S webpage, Small Area Plans would modify zoning to support housing and healthy business districts, bring about infrastructure projects to address transportation and public space needs, and implement programs and funding to promote small businesses and arts and culture.

These zoning modifications would be captured in five subdistrict categories that – when applied to development proposals in neighborhood squares and main street areas – would supersede the existing codes for those specific zoning districts.

Hyde Park's zoning code – Article 69 – took effect in 2012 after about two years of collaboration between the neighborhood and the City. However, as large scale BPDA backed developments have been proposed for the greater Cleary Square area over the last handful of years, it has been routinely and summarily bypassed by the ZBA through variances granted, thus clearing the way for their construction.

Regarding these large projects, the BPDA's methods of operation and its interaction with the community have also been an ongoing and consistent source of local contention. This history – as well as the speed at which the 118 page draft zoning text amendment’s community process is unfolding, its broadness, and the time of year (the holiday season) in which it was introduced – informed the questions, comments, and complaints that flew at and around the new district councilor as he commented, listened, and made notes.

Pepén started off by speaking of the initiative, and referring to an unadvertised meeting, scheduled for Jan. 8, between the BPDA and Hyde Park community leaders. “I think that’s not the right approach,” he said, going into his experience overseeing the abutters meeting process as the director of the Mayor’s Office of Neighborhood Services (ONS) and saying he wanted everyone taken into consideration. “But if all the voices in the neighborhood – especially people like the HPNA and other neighborhood associations across the city – aren’t taken fully into consideration, then we’re defeating the purpose.”

HPNA member Craig Martin responded. “I’m troubled that you already declared what you thought,” he said of Pepén’s just stated position on the proposal. “That bothers me because I kind of want to remind you that – and I’m sorry if this comes out as insulting – but you no longer work for the Mayor.” Continuing, he finished his point. “It’s so important that you bring constituents’ thoughts – and I mean if they don’t like the Squares + Streets... then it’s up to you to say this is not agreeable to Hyde Park.”

HPNA President Mimi Turchenitz referenced Mayor Wu’s campaign planks of transparency and an increased community voice, as well as the expectation of a zoning overhaul and increased housing. “As Enrique suggested, maybe there are things people can like in this new zoning language, but there’s just not been enough time, and there’s not been enough clarity, and it’s too siloed for us to move forward in this rapid pace.”

Turchenitz contrasted Squares + Streets with the Article 69 process, which involved neighborhood/City discussions, draft review, and adjustments culminating in the Hyde Park zoning amendment. “That’s what should be happening,” she put forward. “And that should be happening all over the city because this is citywide zoning, and it’s going to create tools that then become as of right, and can get dropped over on our Article 69.”

HPNA Vice President Brian Putnam was more receptive, commenting positively on the fact that – rather than continuing to ignore Article 69 – the BPDA is attempting to change the rules to fit its agenda. “It’s not even close to a complete product, but it’s a structure where you ease stuff in,” he said of S+S. “You have to start somewhere.” Nonetheless, he did acknowledge the potential for confusion in the draft’s language and technical terminology, and suggested that the community should focus on clarifying those details.

The floor was eventually closed on Squares + Streets, with Pepén responding to all that he had heard over the prior 20 minutes. “What’s my job?” he asked. “It’s to make sure that I elevate this frustration to the BPDA,” he answered. “And that’s what I will do.”

Visit the BPDA website (www.bostonplans.org) and click on its Squares + Streets link to find out more about the initiative, to see meeting and event schedules, to access a copy of the draft zoning text amendment, and to comment on it until Sunday, Jan. 28.

There will be a Hyde Park/Roslindale Squares + Streets meeting at 6:30 p.m. on Jan. 29. For further information about this and the HPNA, email hydeparkneighbors@gmail.com.

103 N. Beacon design draws mixed reactions

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) held an Article 80 Large Project Review Impact Advisory Group (IAG) meeting, combined with a public meeting on Jan. 3 in a virtual format with about 30 people in attendance.

The proposal includes 246,500 square feet of new lab and research and development space at 92 feet of height (down one story since the last meeting) and with 3,100 square feet of ground-floor retail space. The proposal also allows for a maximum of 212 parking spaces and a minimum of 160 in a two-level underground garage.

The proponent, IQHQ – who is also handling the redevelopment of the former Sound Museum space at the nearby 155 N. Beacon site – has redesigned the front facade of the building to form parallel setbacks since the last public meeting regarding the site in June. Originally, the project had diagonal lines on the building as the floors ascended, creating a visual effect similar to a switchback mountain track.

CBT Architects is handling the design, and the group’s representative, Phil Casey, said the change was due to feedback from the BPDA and the Boston Civic Design Commission.

“You changed the whole front huh?” asked IAG member Ellen McCrave. “It’s a box now. It used to have that nice little bit of funkiness to it and less of a box.”

“We’ve evolved that stepped form to bring more of that architectural likeness to the frontage,” Casey said. “In concert with BPDA staff and in response to some of their comments, they wanted to see the building align a little bit better with the street wall and the buildings that are happening along North Beacon Street, but still allowing pedestrian movement and allowing access to that crosswalk there.”

Many residents and IAG members praised the design of the building as well, but McCrave said she felt it wasn’t an improvement.

“That’s too bad,” she said. “I thought it was kind of nice to look at something other than squares.”

One resident asked about traffic. She said the pedestrian entrance on Arthur Street could potentially clog up the street due to drop offs, and asked if the proposed bike lane for the road could be removed as part of the BPDA project, if in the future it was found that there was too much traffic on Arthur Street.

BPDA Project Manager Quinn Valcich said that was a curb regulation issue that the Boston Transportation Department (BTD) would have to look into.

Howard Stein Hudson Traffic Engineer Liz Peart discussed vehicle trip generation, which includes both vehicles staying for the duration and drop-offs. She said the site would generate around 2,000 vehicle trips per day, about 1,000 vehicles coming and going to the site.

“The site today also has a liquor store that generates trips too, granted not as high as 2,000, but the site is active today and those trips will go away as this site is constructed,” she said. “But developments do generate over the course of 24 hours numbers that are in that 2,000 ballpark. I’m just saying that because 2,000 can sound scary, but it doesn’t happen all at once.”

IAG member Mary Elarosee asked if this project would direct its linkage money – funding for affordable housing – to the Boston Housing Authority’s Faneuil Gardens redevelopment project. IQHQ representative Kim Thai said they had done that already for the 155 North Beacon St. development, but that for this she was under the assumption that the design and funding for the BHA redevelopment was already underway.

“We obviously will have housing linkage that will be tied to this particular project as well, but we had not had any further discussions as to whether or not it would be directed at Faneuil Gardens... It’s definitely something we can consider like we did with our last project,” she said.

Residents also asked about bike parking, which Casey said they will have quite a bit of. Residents then asked if electronic bike charging stations

The BPS calendar

The Boston Public School calendar has always intrigued me: How many, if any, parents are consulted to give input before it is formalized months beforehand? How much common sense infuses it? Do schools exist for teachers (to work in) or for students (to learn in)?

Let's start in September. Boston Public never returns to school on the Tuesday after Labor Day: school, with few exceptions, opens on the following Thursday; why not open on the Tuesday following Labor Day, and why the delay this past September for pre-K and Kindergarten students to start the next week, on September 11?

This past Christmas occurred on a Monday, but there was no school on Friday, December 22, forcing many parents to scramble for childcare. Why couldn't students go to school on that Friday, 3 days before Christmas? [Interestingly enough, the last day before the Xmas break for BC High, serving 7th graders and above, was December 15. Huh??]

Following the Christmas vacation is the return to school on January 3, again forcing BPS parents/guardians to scramble for childcare, following a nonsensical tradition of having no school on January 2 so that teachers and students can ease back into the schedule with a professional day is the basis for the first calendar stress of every new year.

I understand why there seem

My Kind of Town/

to be more snow days called nowadays: the ubiquitous school buses have to negotiate many narrow streets. To its credit, the School Department does call off school the night before to allow for child-care scheduling, although sometimes the huge storms never materialize. Not surprisingly, the announcement of snow days extends the last day even further in June to accommodate the state-imposed 180-day minimum.

I've always bristled at the February vacation: most Boston Public School kids do not go skiing or visit Disney; teachers might but students do not. Delaying the end of the school year by 4 days—Presidents' Day, occurring on the Monday of the vacation week, is a national holiday—has terrible consequences: very little learning occurs in June, though more might occur this year because of the installation of air conditioning in public school classrooms.

March 17th and June 17th are no longer Suffolk County holidays, meaning that there is school: Evacuation/St Patrick's Day and Bunker/Breed's Hill day have bitten the dust.

While I do espouse the Wednesday before Thanksgiving for being a half day, thus enabling travel for many students and teachers, the half days at the end of the year, in 2024 on June 18 and 20 (June 19 is now a state holiday), cause more childcare problems for working parents. Even if snow days cause the last days of school to occur later in June, there will be at least two half days at the end.

Fortunately, private schools do not have to abide by the state requirement for public schools (except pre-K, K, and 12th grade) to be 180 days. Let's hope the state Department of Education never tries to impose this on schools where equal, if not more, learning occurs in fewer days.

Cafe around January 2022.

"From the neon signs radiating a sense of old world realness, to the trophies and placards on the wall, I felt that the Pleasant Cafe was perfect for our scenes," explained Ryan Hull, who was the Special Effects Foreman for The Holdovers. "The old school swiveling bar stools, from an era where people were thinner, the booths and the wooden paneling were definitely a hit in eras gone by."

Hull noted that it was slightly difficult to fit the entire crew inside the Pleasant and do camera turnarounds, but they made it work while maintaining film set COVID-19 protocols.

Hull created a smoky atmosphere in the Pleasant Cafe for the movie.

"If this were the 70s, there would be a lot of smoking. Since some of the background actors had lit fake cigarettes, we maintained a perfectly hazy atmosphere down the two long halls of Pleasant Cafe. The booths on each side of the camera were a nice respite for the cramped crew, and by the end of the night, some of us were getting very comfy in those booths," he said.

A set dresser covered the floors inside the Cafe with large rugs since the anti-skid flooring was not period appropriate. Production Designer Ryan Warren Smith removed the modern elements inside, such as the flat screen TVs, and added their own elements for the scene, such as a 1960s pinball machine.

"The Pleasant Cafe is like a time capsule, not much has changed," noted Smith. "One of my favorite details was when one of the owners brought out their own personal Christmas dressing that they'd been using since the 1950s. You can see some of their faux candles in the background behind where Paul Giamatti is sitting."

The film crew said they were thankful for the opportunity to film at the Pleasant.

"The location lent itself well to the atmosphere we were after for The Holdovers in that it felt 'familiar' and very authentic. The story was able to play out perfectly within its inviting atmosphere, the local representatives from the Cafe were friendly and made us feel right at home," explained Justin Sulham, a Grip for The Holdovers. A Grip is responsible for setting up, rigging, and striking lighting equipment on a movie set.

At the end of the day, the crew tasted the famous Pleasant Cafe pizza. "All the new and faded newspaper clippings in the front entryway weren't lying. Pleasant Cafe was actually pleasant," said Hull. "Who would've thought?"

The Pleasant Cafe has been a backdrop in several period films in recent years, including the Boston Strangler starring Keira Knightley, a Whitney Houston biopic, and HBO's Julia. Hull also worked on Julia, which filmed multiple scenes at the Pleasant Cafe. "I had a huge sense of déjà-vu until a crew member mentioned that we had been there eight months prior. It still had its charm, and I was still tickled to see that it was such a perfect setting for shoots from the 1950s to the 1980s. I guess if it ain't broke, don't fix it," Hull said. The Pleasant Cafe shared some screenshots of the movie on their Facebook page at www.facebook.com/pleasantcafe.

While most of The Holdovers was filmed in Western Massachusetts, the city of Boston plays a key part in the movie. New England film crew and actors agree that the Boston area is the perfect place to film a period piece.

"It works well for films set in the 1970s (and many other periods) because you can find many locations that have a sense of history and either haven't changed all that much or are easily adaptable for period pieces. In Boston, they were able to use locations that could be altered to look like the period, and changing signage and cars to look like the 1970s made it very believable and really felt like a time machine going back 50 years," said Bill Mootos, who played Mr. Endicott in The Holdovers, alongside Giamatti's character. The Holdovers is predicted to receive multiple Oscar nominations. The movie won three Golden Globe Awards last Sunday for Best Actor in a Musical or Comedy Film, Best Supporting Actress in a Motion Picture, and Best Motion Picture - Musical or Comedy. In his awards acceptance speech, Giamatti thanked his Boston film crew.

tell us which options are appropriate for which parts of your district,” he said. “Then at the end of a small aerial planning process, you would take those zoning changes and make them part of the code.”

Jemison said the planning process will start with carving out density options, about six of them to be precise, for different areas of Roslindale, basically branching out from Roslindale Square.

“And then at the end of a planning process, deciding which of those options are appropriate for which areas of Roslindale,” he said. “So there’s going to be a two-month period where we’re going to be adding those to the code and then a good six-to-nine-month period when we figure out which of those options are best for Roslindale Square.”

Jemison added that Roslindale’s development and zoning experience is one of the reasons they’re starting in the neighborhood.

“We want to start here because we know there’s an infrastructure and people with roots in businesses and neighborhoods surrounding the square for a robust and impactful conversation,” he said.

BPDA Director of Planning Aimee Chambers said they will also be reaching out to various city departments – the Boston Transportation Department, Boston Water and Sewer, the Mayor’s Office of Arts and Culture etc. — to make sure the effort leaves out as few voices as possible.

“We want to make sure that we’re creating plans that are holistic and what the neighborhood needs, aside from just zoning, which is what the BPDA is really kind of the arbiter of, but really thinking of those other public space needs so when we come out of this public plan we really have a document that serves as a guide to all those departments over the course of the next five-to-seven years,” she said.

Jemison said there will be plenty of public meetings to try to hear as many voices as possible. Roslindale Coalition Coordinator and resident Laurie Radwin said residents are concerned the process is moving too fast and will miss key voices in the district.

“There is great concern across the city about the speed of this,” she said. “Mattapan itself had 150 community meetings about how they were going to change the zoning and how they were going to change their corridors and as you listen to us, I think you should aim for heterogeneity of voices, different points of view and not just variability of demographics.”

Jemison and his staff said they would look into reaching out to different parts of the community to get as many voices as possible, including any recommendations the community has for them to reach out to. Former Roslindale Village Main Streets Executive Director and WalkUP Roslindale member Steve Gag said reaching out to the Archdale Housing Development would be a good place to start, and reaching out to local churches was also brought up as a way of bringing in more of the community.

Radwin said in speaking with State Rep. Rob Consalvo before the meeting, they discussed the merits of the current zoning, Article 67, and felt it does have good elements that should be kept.

“We really need to look at what Article 67 got right,” she said. “Sure, some of it has had its day, but some of it may be really worth saving.”

Jemison pointed out that the new zoning will be layered on top of the old and only in certain areas, and so Article 67 would not be lost, just no longer applicable in those specific Squares + Streets areas.

Displacement was brought up during the meeting, with the main questioning as to what happens when the neighborhood gets redeveloped, new buildings bring new people, new people drive up property values and then no one currently living there can afford the rent. Chambers said they want to discuss how to address that not only for residents but small businesses as well.

“There are three or four different ways we could address that issue, and we’re going to try all of them,” Jemison said. “There has to be an anti-displacement strategy that includes both residents and the commercial users. Commercial users might need to demonstrate that they’re going to have more than one commercial space, one that’s for the one that was there before and one for the expanded development. We may need to require that legally.”

Resident Alan Wright asked how they can incentivize more development in the neighborhood. Jemison said he felt the zoning itself might be an incentive, as well as the potential increase in property value because of what’s legally allowed within the zoning.

“The up-zoning does increase the value of those properties and one of the outcomes may be is they’ll recognize the increase in value and they might look for a partner to create more housing,” he said.

On the other side of the coin, Jemison said the changes the neighborhood makes concerning allowable density and other considerations will make developers less likely to go for zoning variances. Requiring variances opens up a project to the risk of numerous delays, project changes, and neighborhood opposition. And all that time, the developer is spending money on community outreach, consultants, traffic engineers, architects and more that are increasing costs every day. Jemison said offering a safer but still profitable option will help with that.

“It creates a level of jeopardy for all involved that I think isn’t as healthy as it could be,” he said. “I think we’d rather have something that is reasonable as-of-right, and we’re going to defend very carefully the outer limits of what that is. So it’s a more accurate zoning but it’s not as susceptible to Zoning Board of Appeal (ZBA) approval. I’d like to have the ZBA have half as many cases, so there’s much more clarity and much more of a reasonable expectation of what you can achieve as-of-right.”

More meetings and public outreach are on the way for the Squares + Streets initiative. To stay up to date, go to <http://tinyurl.com/29cxfnys>

Five Washington St-Green St housing developments completed

Richard Heath
Staff Reporter

For 77 years, from 1912 through 1989, the Green Street Orange line station loomed over the Washington-Green intersection. Today, in 2024, mostly four- and five-story residential buildings totaling 326 apartments now occupy that location and will begin leasing this year. These buildings are distinguished by three lawsuits and the success of the ad hoc Union Avenue Neighborhood Association to reduce the number of units and building heights.

Two new residences, a three-condominium building at 194 Green St. and the nearly completed 14-unit apartment house at 21 Glen Rd. were built as-of-right and had no comment from the neighbors.

The Green Street station saga began in November 2013 when Walter Craven, the owner of a welding shop and auto garage, decided to subdivide his L-shaped lot that faced both Green and Washington streets into two buildings with 20 condominiums.

After three years of debate with some Union Avenue neighbors and repeated Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) and Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) meetings Craven sold his property to City Realty (CRM) in Feb 2016 for $2.3 million.

CRM had similar neighborhood difficulties with its proposal for a six-story, 37-unit apartment building due to difficulty conforming to the Plan JP Rox, and put the Washington Street half of the property up for sale in August 2017 for $2.9 million.

In October 2018, CRM proposed a four-story, 23-unit apartment building at 197 Green St. designed by Embarc; this was reduced down from six-stories with a loss of 14 units after the Union Avenue group stepped in. The existing two-story wood-frame house was demolished in October 2020, and the apartment building was completed at the end of 2022. The ground floor retail space was built out in 2023 and remains unoccupied.

There are four affordable artist live-work apartments that were advertised in May 2023 at 17 percent area median income (AMI). The market rate apartments are listed at a range of $2,700 for a studio to a two-bedroom at $4,000.

The 3171 Washington St. portion was sold by CRM for $2.153 million on Jan. 7, 2020, to the Jamaica Plain Neighborhood Development Corporation (JPNDNC) and New Atlantic Development.

The JPNDNC originally proposed a six-story, 45-unit, fully affordable senior housing apartment building with a new ground floor restaurant for the existing tenant El Embajador Dominican restaurant. Utile was the architect, Ingrid Bengston was the principal designer.

With an array of public monies and tax credits the rents were maintained at 60 percent AMI. The Union Avenue group actively objected both in public and private meetings and as result the building was reduced to four stories and 39 units.

The ZBA approved the development on Feb. 23, 2021, but three months later Monty Gold, owner of the abutting Turtle Swamp Brewery building at 3377 Washington St., sued to stop the project.

Gold's tenant, Turtle Swamp, contended the affordable senior housing was too close and would ruin the business. The suit was mediated and in June 2021 JPNDNC/NAD agreed to redesign the interior of the building and move it back five feet from the lot line.

In another design development El Embajador, in mid-2023 decided it could not wait during construction and declined to relocate to the new restaurant space. According to JPNDNC, it will convert the restaurant space into a community room.

Turtle Swamp closed on Aug. 19, 2023. A 'For Sale' remains on the building. Demolition has not yet begun for the senior housing. In 2020, construction costs were estimated at $18.5 million, but with the lawsuit delay and current construction rates the cost is likely over $21 million.

Gold's lawsuit against JPNDNC was filed days after his suit to stop the Pine Street/TCB supportive and affordable housing across Washington Street was resolved after a year.

Reported at length by The Bulletin, the Pine Street housing of 202 units, with 140 apartments for the formerly homeless is due to open, after five years, in 2024.

Designed by RODE architects, the $105 million housing development had its share of opposition from the Union Avenue group and a contingent from Lourdes Avenue which went on from March through November 2019, including three BPDA Article 80 meetings; Union Ave N/A convinced Pine Street to remove one story, eliminating 22 apartments.

The lottery for the 46-income restricted apartments was opened on Dec. 7. The largest and arguably the most curious building with its jagged upper-story gables on the Washington Street/Green corner, the five-story, 45-unit building received its certificate of occupancy on Oct. 23, 2023.

It took seven years, an abutter's lawsuit and a change of owners to make it a reality. Boston Community Ventures had long owned the aging wood-frame building, most recently used as Boston Mayor Michelle Wu's campaign headquarters; BCV proposed a six-story apartment project at a BPDA meeting on April 28, 2016.

It was designed by Deborah Katz of the Philadelphia firm Interface Studio, who reduced the building at Union Avenue N/A request to five stories. Opposed by almost everyone during its associated ZBA meeting, the Board approved it in May 2017. Two months later an abutters group of renters unsuccessfully sued to stop the building alleging that BCV's supposed high rents would cause displacement. The suit caused a year delay.

BCV changed the make up of the project from ownership to rental units in 2019 but citing financial problems, caused in part by the lawsuit delay, sold the fully-permitted building to Boston zoning attorney Patrick Moloney for $2 million on Nov. 21, 2021. Moloney kept the original Katz design of the building but hired Monte French Architects to reconfigure the unit sizes, now at 31 apartments, and returned the building to rental.

After securing an $18 million loan, Moloney began construction in March 2022. Moloney was required to keep the original affordable units from BCV to eight apartments at 50 percent to 70 percent AMI; these were advertised on Sept. 13, 2023.

3353 Washington St. was completed but not leased out at the end of 2023. The market-rate apartments have not been listed and the ground floor commercial spaces have not been leased yet.

Adjacent to the Pine Street homes, Patrick McKenna of Brighton is slowly completing his three-story, 14-unit apartment building at 21 Glen Rd. on a long vacant 16,000-square-foot lot.

Designed by Arthur Choo with a bold square frame façade, McKenna received a building permit on April 25, 2022.

No affordable units are required because McKenna is building as-of-right. Antonnio Ferrera of HD HUB Development recently sold three condominiums in a long, twin-gable wood-frame house designed by Stephen Souza at 194 Green St. opposite the McKinnley Hotel rooming house.

Replacing a pre-Civil War era gabled house, construction began in August 2022. It required no zoning variances. Vogt Realty Group listed the condominiums at $1.2 to $1.3 million.

There appears to be life yet at 3326 Washington St. proposed by Primary Development as 45 compact living apartments in a five-story building with multiple setbacks.

Primary planned to build one of the city's first compact living apartment buildings on the old JP Glass property, and after several rambunctious community meetings received zoning approval on March 31, 2021. But on June 27, 2033 Primary came back to the zoning board asked and received a one-year extension.

As always with Jamaica Plain housing development stay tuned.

“That hasn’t been part of the conversation, but it’s definitely something we can talk about,” Thai said.

Concerning the 160-212 vehicle parking space range, Casey said the maximum will be the target.

“There’s a little bit of design iteration that has to happen to narrow it down to the exact number of spaces in the structure,” he said.
