Wu: "White Stadium is important to my administration"

Reimagining White Stadium as a public-private partnership with the Boston Unity Sports Program (BUSP) is apparently a high priority with Mayor Michelle Wu.

No fewer than 10 senior members of her staff and administration, including Mayor Wu herself came on the virtual fourth community engagement meeting concerning the stadium on Feb. 12, joined by 240 residents.

"What we've heard and where we're going" was the theme.

Chief of community engagement Brianna Millor was the host, joined by deputy chief of operations Morgan McDaniel who has been coordinating the public process for the multi-million redesign of the stadium since July 2023.

Millor introduced the mayor.

"Mayor Wu's vision is deeply, deeply embedded into White Stadium," she said.

Wu acknowledged that the public has concerns about the time pressure. "This is a complex and unique project," she said.

"We need to put it all together, the park, the schools and the community; the why and the who.

Louijeune outlines her priorities

The West Roxbury Business and Professional Association (WRBPA) welcomed Boston City Council President Ruthzee Louijeune to its Feb. 14 meeting. Louijeune, a city councilor at-large since 2022, became president of the council in January 2024.

Louijeune thanked WRBPA members "for what they contribute to our city and our local community here, through volunteerism and small businesses, which are the backbone of every single neighborhood."

She said she's been president for a month-and-a-half and is serving with four new members on the council, including Ben Weber, the District 6 councilor, "who I am delighted every day to be working with to build a city that all generations deserve."

"My top priority is housing. I started my career as a student attorney at the Harvard Legal Aid Bureau representing families who were facing eviction and foreclosure. I get no greater satisfaction when I can ensure that someone has a place to call home."

She said schools are another focus. "As a Boston public school graduate, our schools are also very important to me. Our students deserve for us to get it right." Louijeune noted her affinity for the Taylor School in Mattapan which she attended for seven years and attended her niece's graduation there last year. "While it was great to be back, little had changed. We're not building schools that meet the changing economy, that meet the changing needs of our students. We can't ensure right now that every school has a gym...an art class, a library and librarian." She said there are federal monies that were received from the federal government during the pandemic that can be allocated. Allocating funds is a tough decision and the budget process allows the city council to best influence the progress on improving schools. Louijeune is also working on a home-rule petition before the State House that would increase the number

Skepticism remains on 180 Western

Susan Kryczka

The Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) held a joint public and Harvard Allston Task Force (HATF) meeting on Feb. 12 to elicit feedback on the latest revised plans for 180 Western Ave., a mixed-use, 200,000-square-foot, seven-story, 280-residential-unit/retail space planned for Allston.

Originally proposed in July 2020, there have since been seven HATF/public meetings resulting in updated versions of the project. While acknowledging those changes, some of the 47 attendees remained wary of what they feel is another large development, built on Harvard land that will continue to alter the face and character of the neighborhood. The development team from Samuels & Associates spent much of the two-hour meeting emphasizing the community benefits of the project and the addition of housing for the city.

“For me, it’s personal,” Wu said. “I put aside one day a week to do laundry, down time and I walk around the park. I was at the stadium today. I see the park from all angles. It is beloved, well used and I feel the heart of the community.”

Wu also seemed to have been studying Frederick Law Olmsted, the park landscape designer; “The most influential figure in landscape history. Franklin Park was his finale,” she said.

“This [White Stadium re-imagine] is part of Olmsted’s original vision, for people to come and be full of activity. I’m not an expert on Olmsted,” Wu said. “I want to be sure to uphold his legacy. The park is not just visual; it’s not just beauty, it’s essential, a sense of belonging. I’m extremely involved in this,” Wu said. “It’s the most important in my administration.”

The Boston Public Schools were featured in far more detail than in the previous three public meetings, and Boston Public Schools (BPS) Superintendent Mary Skipper followed the mayor.

“Sports have not recovered since the pandemic,” Skipper said. “To truly transform, enhance and be truly transformaive, it will be a new world for our athletes and our young people.”

The Boston Parks Department had not been featured in the previous three public meetings and Liza Meyer, chief landscape architect for Parks, described what she called “the five key improvement areas of the park.”

Meyer showed a map on the screen share of the park which illustrated these areas as located in the northern 36 acres of the 500-acre park, at Walnut Avenue and Seaver Street. These five areas are the bear dens, the Playstead Overlook, Long Crouch Woods, the Playstead and Glen Road.

“The goal is to amplify the Playstead as an arts and recreation area,” according to the slide.

The key to this amplification is the Franklin Park administrator that the mayor announced will be hiring at her Jan. 9 State of the City Address. “Help us find the right person for this,” announced the slide.

“You’ll hear more from us on the schematic design of the Overlook” as an amphitheater playhouse in 2024, Meyer said.

McDaniel said that some of the responses heard have been about how the project was segmented. She opened the meeting next to the design teams.

There are two separate architects and landscape architects: Stantec, with its stadium architects Moody/Nolan, serve as both architect and landscape architect for BUSP.

Jones Architects of Salem, and the women-owned landscape architects Crowley-Cotrell, serve the School Department. Tamara Roy of Stantec, Richard Jones of Jones architects and Michelle Crowley of Crowley-Cortell were on the call.

As reported by The Bulletin, Roy has made detailed presentations of the BUSP designs for the west grandstand. New to the community process are the Jones and Crowley-Cotrell firms, both of which gave detailed presentations of the evolutions for the BPS plans for its east grandstand half.

Before introducing the BPS firms, McDaniel explained that although the city is committed to White Stadium, “it has limited resources and could not renovate and upgrade the stadium without a private partnership.”

On the screen share McDaniel expanded on this: “Why two coordinated projects? To prioritize our main goals, maintain control of Boston public school facilities, providing state-of-the-art amenities and robust maintenance schedules through a private partnership.

“The city is overseeing the construction of the field and east grandstand. Boston Unity is leasing the west grandstand and The Grove. Both design teams work in close collaboration.”

On Feb. 12 the public saw for the first time since the process began in July the plans for and thinking behind the BPS east grandstand half.

Dan Ollile of Jones Architects explained with diagrams the design evolution of the east grandstand concluding, “We could not stabilize the east grandstand.”

The firm then designed a row of three buildings now set further back from Playstead Road, the middle of which would be couched within a covered elevated seating stand to match that of the BUSP west side designed by Moody/Nolan.

Capped with a terrace and box seats, it would be 60 feet high. Flanking this would be on the Playstead end a two-story, 70-foot-high gymnasium, student lounge and indoor track; the opposite end closest to Walnut Avenue a low-scale, one-story building would house locker rooms and BPS athletic dept offices. The Parks Dept will review the overall design as it conforms to the Franklin Park Action Plan.

The Grove continues to have design concerns, but BUSP continues to be excited about what it calls a “community amenity” and architect Roy explained that two, one-story buildings would be tucked at the west corner of the fenced-off space the access to which would be regulated.

Roy explained with a screen share diagram that The Grove would have a wide array of programming, from tai chi to mini golf, dance to yoga. “We’re working with the Parks Dept,” said Roy, “to coordinate the huge variety of programs to bring people into the park.”

An hour remained in the two-and-a-half-hour zoom and moderator Millor called on about 12 speakers. Public comment was generally supportive with transportation and parking being the chief concerns of most.

One caller from Walnut Ave said his park-side neighborhood submitted a petition in support signed by 174 people, cautioning they would refuse support if they weren’t satisfied with the transportation plan.

The only one in opposition was Karen Mauney Brodeck, director of the Emerald Necklace Conservancy. The Conservancy recently met with the mayor to express its concerns.

“I get it that this stadium needs work,” Mauney Brodeck said. “I don’t want to slow this down, but it’s regrettable that the community was not asked first: no one from the community was asked if it wanted a professional Women’s soccer team,” in White Stadium.

McDaniel closed out the meeting by saying that no demolition would begin until “all the pieces of the planning are coordinated into a comprehensive plan that meets the BPS needs and public concerns.”

She said an Impact Advisory Group meeting was scheduled for Feb. 26 and a transportation workshop in April.

Prayer to the Blessed Virgin

(Never known to fail!)

Oh, most beautiful flower of Mt. Carmel, fruitful vine, splendor of Heaven, Blessed Mother of the Son of God, Immaculate Virgin, assist me in this necessity. Oh Star of the Sea, help me and show me herein you are my mother. Oh Holy Mary, Mother of God, Queen of Heaven and Earth, I humbly beseech thee from the bottom of my heart to succor me in my necessity (make request). There are none that can withstand your power. Oh Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee (three times). Holy Mary, I place this cause in your hands (three times). Say this prayer for three consecutive days and then you must publish and it will be granted to you. —V.C.

Miracle Prayer

Dear Heart of Jesus, in the past I have asked You for many favours. This time, I ask you this very special one (mention favour). Take it, dear Heart of Jesus, and place it within Your own broken heart where Your Father sees it. Then, in His merciful eyes, it will become Your favour, not mine. Amen. Say for three days, promise publication and favour will be granted. —V.C.

Novena to St. Clare

Ask St. Clare for three favours, 1 business, 2 impossible. Say nine Hail Marys for nine days, with lighted candle. Pray whether you believe or not. Publish on the ninth day. Powerful novena. Say “May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be praised, adored, glorified, now and forever, throughout the whole world. Amen.” Your request will be granted, no matter how impossible it may seem. —V.C.

of liquor licenses allocated to neighborhoods so small restaurants can afford to get one. These currently cost around $600,000 but would be reduced to just fees. She is also urging the legalization of beekeeping in the city.

Resident Steve Morris mentioned the state's budget cuts to the Parkway Little League, the costs of supporting migrants, the loss of a community center in Roxbury, and the Mass/Cass loss of an addiction center. "Would you propose a bill on the council floor to rescind Boston as a sanctuary city?" asked Morris.

"Those issues are real. I will not propose that to the Boston City Council," said Louijeune, adding that the governor is looking to get more funding for housing migrants from the federal government. "We're facing a humanitarian crisis. The rec. center goes back to being a rec center on May 31. That's what happening." She noted the track coach and his program is now at the Reggie Lewis Center. Louijeune said she supports allowing migrants to work to help fill the labor gap. "We have significant labor shortages, right here in our city...the way that we have dealt with shortages is with immigrant labor."

Another attendee complained that the mayor's administration and Louijeune have not heard the concerns about the "road diet." "I'm also happy to hear feedback. My office was present at the meetings last year, where I already had a conflict. I know it was a difficult issue to ensure pedestrian safety. There are going to be many difficult conversations that come with that. I heard people who supported the road diet and people who opposed it." She said that parking convenience sometimes comes up against safety concerns. There is a study to see what the road diet impact is on the side streets. "I do want to be sure our businesses are not being hurt and not being harmed."

The West Roxbury Senior Center, or the lack thereof, still remains a top need. "Is there any movement on that study for the senior center?" asked resident and West Roxbury Neighborhood Council member Steve Smith. "I know at the state level there was an allocation."

"I don't have a current update that I can share, but I will bring that back here," said Louijeune.

Resident Anne Glora mentioned that the state funding for Ethos was cut in half. "We closed yesterday for the "not" snowstorm but last week we had over 100 seniors for both days in the Elks Club. It's a huge need in this part of the city. It's not just West Roxbury."

Under other business, WRBPA President Jim Hennigan introduced the new West Roxbury neighborhood liaison, Ben Tayag. Tayag grew up in and currently lives in West Roxbury. Sean Brennan from the West Roxbury/ Roslindale Kiwanis Club is fundraising with 50/50 raffle to be drawn on March 18 with $20 per chance. Half the money raised will go to the Kiwanis club, the other to the winner.

More than 200 people gathered in Roslindale Saturday to celebrate longtime business owner of Tony's Market, Antonio DeBenedictis' 85th birthday and his 60th year in business.

"The people who come in, some have been new, some have been with me for 10 years, and some for 50 years," said Tony. "I have grandmothers, daughters, grandchildren. You know, three generations, it makes me feel good! You make people happy, it makes you feel good. That's who I am. Especially at my age, I'm 85 years old; $10,000 more,

$10,000 less don't mean anything anymore."

Inside the event hosted by the Roslindale Sons and Daughters of Italy, there were pictures all around the chandelier-lit banquet hall highlighting old photos of Tony as a boy, the original building for the market, and decades-old family photos. The DJ was center stage between an Italian and American flag, playing classics from both countries like "Comme facette mammata" and "Sweet Caroline" as people mingled and danced during social hour. Tony, a smaller man with a mammoth of a presence, made his rounds, going around group to group, gregariously talking to friends, family and customers. There was catered pizza from Pino's Pizza — which Tony supplies meat to — a sandwich bar with rolls, banana peppers, cheeses, every type of cured meat imaginable, and a charcuterie board with mini Italian flags.

Midway through the event, State Representative Rob Consalvo and District 5 Boston City Councilor Enrique Pepen went up on behalf of the City of Boston to award Tony with two resolutions thanking Tony's Market for his "commitment and passion for the entire community," and wishing Tony a happy 85th

A long way from Lourdes Avenue

Lourdes Avenue, not named for Bernadette Soubirous's February Marian visions in that small French town in 1858, used to be a hotbed — okay, a warmbed — of street hockey in the 1950's. Forming a square U, it connects twice to Jamaica Plain's Forest Hills Street, coincidentally within the confines of Jamaica Plain's Our Lady of Lourdes parish.

Played on sneakers rather than roller blades, street hockey took place on the street then, hence the name, with little pieces of wood. A small scrap of a 2x3 was the ideal puck, quite unlike the plastic ones in vogue today. The sticks were the same as those used in ice hockey—all wood—and they broke regularly and/or were worn down by the friction of the asphalt. Taping of the blade occurred regularly. No pads were donned, and when a slap shot was taken mimicking the style of Fernie Flaman or Leo Boiven, defenders—except for the goalie—would frequently jump to avoid nasty shin contact.

A steep but grassy cliff was behind one of the goals established by rocks put into the street unlike the netted cages of today. If a "puck" went beyond that goal and down the cliff, someone had to scramble down to fetch it.

There were no side boards to enhance stick handling: curbs filled in this need. Cars, of course, partially lined Lourdes Avenue, their mildly affluent owners living in the nearby 3- and 6-deckers. Play stopped when a puck wound up stopped underneath a vehicle, until someone got down on their knees to extract it.

All of which points to the newly proposed street-hockey "rink" for the Billings Field upgrade, resembling the current street hockey venue at Fallon Field. When completed, may it not detract from the legendary

My Kind

Joe Galeota

Shamrock Shootout, now in its 16th year held annually on nearby Temple Street.

Also proposed is a splash pad for the younger children. The revitalization of this grandiose field does not seem to infringe on the already existing baseball and softball diamonds, as well as the tennis courts. This centrally located field in the middle of the West Roxbury section of Boston—unlike the wonderful Millennium Park located near the periphery—will have much going for its grand re-opening in the fall of next year, but the real test is how available and welcoming will its restrooms be. The current bricked-in restrooms seem to be on an unpredictable schedule: sometimes they are open and sometimes they're not.

Sadly, vandalism occurs frequently with park bathrooms: vandals—mostly in their teenage years—are protected during their dastardly deeds by the privacy and the lenient court system. But the engineers who send specially outfitted astronauts to the moon and equip rocket ships to Mars with lavatories should dedicate some of their time to resolving bathroom issues at playgrounds: are portable "Johnny-on-the-Spots" the only solution?

From Sandra Serkess of the West Roxbury Historical Society

Brook Farm was a social experiment that took place in West Roxbury from 1841 till 1847, when for myriad reasons, it folded. It was to be a utopia, but one of the problems was that everyone had a different image of Utopia. Basically, the plan was for it to be a self-supporting farm, where everyone contributed, men and women were equal, and people could choose the work they wanted to do.

It was a beautiful farm with rolling hills, streams, trees, flowers, birds, and vegetation. It had been farm operated by a couple, Charles Ellis and Maria Mayo. George and Sophia Ripley had summered there and felt it would be just the right locale for their Utopia. They spearheaded the concept and made it a reality.

Many people supported it in word and deed. They invested, donated tools, animals, and utensils. You have heard of many of these people: Bronson Alcott, Henry David Thoreau, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Margaret Fuller, Francis Shaw (father of Robert Gould), Theodore Parker, and other literati. The interesting thing was that none of them ever lived there and some never even visited! Even Margaret Fuller had a cottage named after her that she never slept in. One can only surmise that they were loath to give up the creature comforts of 1841.

However, one famous author summoned up the courage and took up residence. His name was Nathaniel Hawthorne. Though he had already been published, he hadn't yet reached his pinnacle. (Fun Fact: His name was originally "Hathorne", but when he reached maturity, he changed it because he was a direct descendant of one of the more horrific judges of the Salem witch trials!)

Why did he go? I have read several reasons attributed to him. He was madly in love with

"What Barry's Corner has meant to the neighborhood...it's always been an important intersection of two important streets," said David Manfredi, architect for the site, referring to the corner of North Harvard Street and Western Avenue. He said the new building will provide a bicycle track, a landscaped public zone, a sidewalk, and a double row of trees that wraps around Western Avenue. The primary front door will be on Bertram Street, with some open space and accessible seating. "Open space that is open to everyone, not just privatized," he said. "There will be five stories of brick, again three with colors or textures of brick, very much drawn out of the red bricks of the neighborhood. We've tripled the number of street trees." Seven different curb cuts that are there now will also be reduced to one in the plan.

"I genuinely like the design of this project," said John Cusack, HATF member, pointing out the various zones of sidewalk, public seating, and exterior open space for the community. "That whole reduced excavation is really going to help this project," he said regarding plans for construction mitigation. "I think you have a terrific project. Thank you and good luck." Christine Varriale, another HATF member, agreed. "The team has made a lot of really good adjustments. It's in a really good position right now. It's going to transform the corner in a really positive way."

Tim McHale, HATF member noted the number of expensive restaurants. "By and large, it's not going to be attractive to those who live here. I would like to see smaller retail that everybody can use." McHale noted empty retail space in the area. Peter Sougarides, principal, Samuel & Associates said there is currently no sense of place for retail. "Stores want to be near other stores. A good pedestrian street should be two-sided. You should have retail on both sides." Sougarides was confident that retail stores would work. McHale asked for a commitment to encourage smaller mom and pop stores.

Another HATF member, Bruce Houghton, said he liked the community benefits but that it is a land lease from Harvard, and Harvard is not participating in this project beyond the land lease. Houghton said he believes that Harvard is hiding behind the developers.

"Harvard should be participating in community benefits, too. I wonder if they've offered anything." He asked Mark Handley, who was representing Harvard, what the university is offering on this piece of property.

"Harvard is not providing benefits on this property," said Handley.

"Is that going to be the position Harvard takes in the future?" asked Houghton. When no definitive response was forthcoming, Houghton suggested an agenda item for the next HATF meeting to define how these developments go forward on land leases and Harvard's non-participation in community benefits beyond the land-lease.

Another question was raised about whether abutters are satisfied with the project.

"This project does meet all of the requirements of zoning," said Sougarides. "With four years of outreach and seven meetings, hard to know what abutters have been involved."

Other community members raised objections. "Where is the traffic, the construction vehicles, what lane are they using?" asked Paula Alexander. "We never had a "true abutter" meeting. There is still no open space for the residents. We're a neighborhood of two-family homes and vehemently opposed the project." Alexander blamed the large developers for creating a wedge between long-term homeowners and the more transient population. "We oppose the entrance on Bertram Street. I just want to ask that we compromise." Alexander supports a smaller scale development that fits in with the neighborhood.

Robert Breslin asked why 280 units were needed to make it work.

"Costs are up 30 percent. Rents have not gone up 30 percent. You can't get the rent necessary to make that work," said Sougarides. Breslin worries that every project gets approved with no walking trails or parks to sit in. "There's going to be a canyon down Western Avenue," he said.

Mary-Helen Black asked how all the landscaping, etc., will fit into the current two-way lanes going toward the river. "We are not losing a lane of traffic. We pushed the building back to allow for more space," Sougarides said. "I think that's a positive," said Black.

More river access wanted in HP

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Ruskindale Rosebury Road Neighborhood Association (RRRd) in Hyde Park met recently with Community Organizer for the Hyde Park Neponset River Access Committee (HPNRAC) Suzanne Hinton and discussed expanding uses at the Neponset River.

Hinton said the committee is looking to expand all access to the Neponset in the neighborhood for recreation, and the first point in that plan is to advocate for the Massachusetts Department of Recreation and Conservation (DCR) to expand the work it's doing at the Doyle Playground.

"Hyde Park has very little accessible waterfront, and so the organization Neponset River Watershed Association (NepRWA) identified local environmental justice communities and said that we really need to increase presence here so that communities along the watershed – and there are 14 communities that the river runs through – so that everyone gets a chance to be in nature and heal and connect and resist the isolation that the recent plague has thrown us into," she said.

The neighborhood successfully advocated over many years to renovate and update Doyle Playground, off of River Street, for a brand new recreation space. The space's design, which incorporates a lot of community input, creates walking trails to the river, and Hinton said basically the HPNRAC wants DCR to expand walking trails from Doyle to the West Street Urban Wild Park.

"We're hoping that the DCR and the EPA can work together to extend the DCR trail another one-third-of-a-mile to the West Street Urban Wild," she said. "Maybe even through the Urban Wild and letting out at Walter Street. And if that happened, we would essentially be unlocking about five acres of public use for Hyde Parkers."

Hinton said this is a multi-pronged plan to give Hyde Parkers recreational spaces along the river, and the Doyle/West Street plan is just the tip of the spear in a multi-pronged plan to do that.

"It's a way for people to get on the Neponset Greenway and the Fairmount Greenway, which runs from South Bay all the way down to Readville along the Fairmount/Indigo Line," she said. "That's nine miles of little pocket parks and greenspaces for people to go in and rest and connect. And that's the same with the Neponset Greenway, which runs 13 miles along the watershed."

Hinton said the area at the end of West Street, which gives access to the Urban Wild there, is a dead-end road with a lot of hazards at the moment and it is not really conducive to public recreational use.

"It is dangerous; there are trucks there. There is Devereaux Construction, and it's a hazard," she said. "That area is a public road, and we want to make sure that it's accessible to residents of Hyde Park because that's an access point to the water."

Hinton said they are putting together two large events in the spring to raise awareness of the plan and to garner community input on it, though they haven't yet been scheduled.

"Hopefully in April, just a couple of weeks apart, to really explore the past of the river and get people to imagine the future together," she said. "We want to be starting community engagement, especially around this trail that we're advocating for, and then we'll turn over our efforts and what we found to DCR when, fingers crossed, they sign the papers and get that extension started."

Hinton said she's hopeful because DCR and the officials from the City of Boston have been receptive to the plan.

On the actual river side, she said the committee is watching with interest the EPA's Superfund Site cleanup of the Neponset from Mother's Brook basically up to the Fairmount Line MBTA Commuter Rail Station. The site has been contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) when the area had many more industrial uses. She encouraged residents to attend the upcoming Feb. 27 informational meeting at 6:30 p.m., which she said the EPA will use to update residents on what they're finding in the river.

"The EPA is there right now studying the soil and trying to find out what level of remediation needs to be done," she said. "They're testing the levels of PCBs that is in the soil – the toxic stuff – to find out where it needs to go."

Basically, Hinton said there are sites that accept this waste, but they are categorized by what level of toxicity there is, and she said they need to have those levels documented so the waste can go to the right sites.

Sophia Peabody and needed to save money so they could wed. Another reason attributed to him directly was that he felt that as an author who sat all day, his work was stifled due to the lack of exercise. Equally using his brain and his body would strengthen both, he hoped, and his creations would be the better for it.

For whatever reason he came with great alacrity, and after a fairly brief time, left the same way! A quote attributed to him upon his hasty departure: "I do not fancy playing chambermaid to a cow!"

However, the experience influenced his writing for some time to come. His next work of note was The Blithedale Romance in which the scene is a place based on Brook Farm. Personally, I did not like the book, it was too dark. It does not have a happy ending, but it has a worthy theme: which is more important, community interest or self interest.

Why is it called a romance? Hawthorne's themes all seemed to center around the loss of innocence, the coming of age. I will hazard a guess that romance can only come when we have navigated severe disappointment and learned to grow with it.

But who knows?

But lest ye despair, let me hasten to assure you that there were two very happy romances connected with this story: Hawthorne and his wife had a long happy marriage, as did George and Sophia Ripley.

"Tony's Market is more than just a meat market or a butcher shop or a supermarket. And yes, I'm Italian, so it's a special place in my heart as an Italian American, but it's more than that," said Rep. Consalvo. "It's a fixture in our community. It's a meeting place; It's a gathering place. When you walk into Tony's Market, whether you're picking up 25 pounds of steak or lamb or veal or just coming in to get an Italian sub, you feel like you're home."

Despite pleas for no gifts on the store's website, the community showed up and showed out. An overflowing tiny gift table prompted attendees to put the vast majority of presents on the floor beside it, wine bottle tops and orchid flowers peeking out of tops of gift bags.

Tony was the oldest boy born into a family of eight children, raised in the small Italian village of Pratola Serra, outside of Naples. In his childhood, listening to operas on the radio and having dances for the kids of the town hosted by his family fostered his exhilarating and everlasting love for the opera and ballroom dancing, now having opera nights inside the store as a nod to his upbringing.

"I love what I do! I always say two things energize me: Tony's Market and the dance floor!" Tony said with a big smile.

After surviving World War II, he arrived via boat with his siblings and father to the US at age 19.

"His greatest strength is his perspective on life," said Tony's wife, Deb Debenedictis. "Tony lived through World War II; he lived through the downturn in the Italian economy after that. He came here, he worked his way up, he made up his mind, said and he was going to have a business. He was going to put things forward. He says things happen to everybody. What matters is your perspective on it—what you do with it."

In 1963, he opened his shop, Tony's Market, originally in East Dedham before relocating a couple years later to Roslindale Square. Tony butchers meats; he hand makes sausages, serves cannoli and sells imported Italian goods.

"I don't buy meat any place else but Tony's," said Eileen Verderico, who said she has been a customer of Tony's for 57 years. "And the companionship after all the years, he will tell me what's good, what isn't good. He's the best. All the years I've been going to Tony, I would never even think of buying anything anywhere else... You can't help once you've been there not to go again. His personality, his product, his joy... It's total."

After having been in Roslindale Square for nearly 50 years, Tony decided to switch to an entirely brand new building after construction and scaffolding overtook the entrance. Despite the move to a new location, the community moved with him. The new building, with the exterior trim being green, white and red, resembles an Italian flag flipped vertically, symbolic of the unwavering connection to hometown, but the home he has made here.

"When I walk in, I've been going for such a long time, he knows me, but then I'm also amazed at the person behind me, he knows them just as well, asking them about their family," said resident Julian Braxton. "Going around Boston, I tell people that I live in Roslindale, it is very common for people [to] say, 'Oh, have you been to Tony's Market?' My answer is, 'Of course!' So Tony is Roslindale and Roslindale is Tony. He represents the very best of our neighborhood."

Some things never change: Tony remains the same person at heart decades ago.

"I don't feel any different than I felt 10 years ago," said Tony. "I'm a ballroom dancer. I still can dance all night. I still can work all day. I still work 40-50 hours a week and I still do traveling... I love a full life. You have to love life."

Tony's Market is located at 4381 Washington Street, is open 8am-5pm on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays, and 8am-6pm on Thursdays and Fridays.

FIFTH ANNUAL BRIGHTON WINTER FARMERS MARKET

The Presentation School Foundation (PSF) Community Center is hosting our fifth annual Brighton Winter Farmers Market every other Saturday at Oak Square (located at 640 Washington Street, Brighton, MA 02135). We hope to provide community members with the opportunity to experience a vibrant local economy, access to fresh, healthy food, and enjoy a gathering space throughout the winter months.

NepRWA HYBRID PRESENTATION

The Neponset River Watershed Association (NepRWA) invites the public to join their Annual Neponset River Water Quality Presentation on Tuesday, March 5 from 6:30 pm - 8 pm. The event will take place in the Canton Public Library Community Room, located at 786 Washington Street, Canton.

From May through October, over 40 volunteers collaborate with NepRWA staff to collect water quality samples from 41 sites across the Neponset River Watershed. The samples are then tested for E.coli, Phosphorus levels, and Dissolved Oxygen. The Water Quality Presentation looks at the current sampling data and compares it to previous years to identify long-term trends. This data informs NepRWA's efforts to monitor the health of the Neponset River and take action as needed.

The event will be held both in-person and over Zoom, with registration required for both options. Light refreshments will be served. For more information and registration, please visit www.neponset.org/events/annual-water-quality-presentation For any questions, please contact NepRWA Environmental Fellow, Benni Marques, at marques@neponset.org or 781-575-0354 x302
