

Friends of Allandale claim first victory in lawsuit for development

The lawsuit against the City of Boston and the Wondergroup Development company continues for 64 Allandale Rd.

The Friends of the Allandale Woods (FAW) stated last week that during the group's ongoing lawsuit against the City of Boston and the developer Wondergroup that they have claimed a small victory after the lawsuit was allowed to continue despite a motion of dismissal from the aforementioned defendants.

The lawsuit was brought about after the City of Boston Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) approved a new development from Wondergroup at 64 Allandale Rd. Residents formed the FAW group to oppose the development, as they state it would cause a negative impact on the surrounding wildlife, vernal pools, density and traffic in the area (the proposal calls for 18 units on a two-acre property).

The motion of dismissal worked on several counts, as many of the original plaintiffs were dismissed, as well as issues of environment. FAW member Tony LaCasse said these issues were dismissed because the judge wanted to focus on zoning issues alone, but that they could bring them up in later court proceedings.

"He basically pared it down to zoning issues on both sides," LaCasse said. "The thing to understand on this is most judges and judicial proceedings pare things down to what they consider the very narrow law to

Making Strides against Breast Cancer celebrates 25 years of giving

Tens of thousands of residents, supporters and cancer survivors came out on Sunday for the 25th annual Making Strides Against Breast Cancer fundraiser.

The 25th annual Making Strides Against Breast Cancer Walk/Run slammed the Hatch Memorial Shell Sunday morning as tens of thousands of participants flooded the area.

Pink shirts could be seen as far away as the Boston Common as the event strolled through the neighborhoods. The event was part of a national effort from the American Cancer Society (ACS) to raise funds and support for cancer research and patient support.

Michelle Shlahger, her husband Bruce and several of their children came out to the event to show support for survivors and the cause. Michelle Shlahger said she herself is a 22-year survivor, and has been coming out as much as she can in that time to support Making Strides.

"We've been coming here for 20 years," she said. "It feels great to see the love and support here."

Bruce Shlahger added that getting the family out to Strides is never a problem.

"We just ask, it's very easy, we just say we're going," he said. "These are all repeat walkers, too. We all really enjoy it."

Norwood resident Robin DiFlaminies, who started the local group Robin's Breast Friends, said she's been helping

Verizon FIOS Expanding

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The City of Boston and the Verizon telecommunications company announced a new agreement last week that would double the areas of the city served by the company's fiber-optic network.

The company initially began its foray into the city at the end of last year, starting construction in Dorchester, Dudley Square and West Roxbury after an agreement reached in April of 2016 to replace the city's copper-based infrastructure with the new technology. This new amendment to the agreement will bring the company's coverage from 28 percent of the city to 56 percent, bringing service to all of Jamaica Plain, Hyde Park, Mattapan, Roslindale and Roxbury. The agreement will also bring partial service to South Boston and the South Boston Waterfront.

"We are a proud partner in expanding access to broadband choice to more Boston neighborhoods and communities," said Boston Mayor Walsh. "Providing constituents with

Council to look at short-term rental processes, Puerto Rico relief

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Boston City Council voted last week to approve a call for a hearing from District 8 City Councilor Josh Zakim to go over the review processes for new developments looking to market short-term rental spaces like AirBnB.

"This hearing order is the result of several things that have been happening, around the city but in particular form the neighborhoods I represent," he said.

Zakim said many neighborhood organizations, including the Alliance of Downtown Civic Organizations and many others, gather data and organize around the problem of short-term rentals.

"This hearing is intended to look at a specific aspect of this and when we have large-scale development projects that are working their way through their review process – the Boston Planning and Development Agency's Article 80 process – there have been some claims that folks are planning to mass lease a significant portion of the units they're constructing to short-term rental operators," he said. "While this certainly isn't something we're specifically looking to prohibit, it's something where it's important that we have the transparency in the review process

Portrait as essence at Menino Art Center exhibition

Silvina Mizrahi poses next to her sculpture "Soul's Breeze" shortly after winning the Director's Choice award at the MAC Portraits exhibition. The exhibition will go until Oct. 19.

Matt MacDonald Staff Reporter

The Menino Arts Center at 26 Central Ave. is currently hosting Portraits until Oct. 19.

The juried exhibition opened on Sept. 13 and the Artists' Opening Reception was held on Friday evening, Sept. 22, during which time gallery visitors could meet some of the artists and talk with them about their work.

In the crowded main exhibition room, MAC Curator and exhibitor Sasja Lucas explained how the juried exhibition worked for this show. The entry period lasted for about a month, during which time artists could enter up to three pieces of their work. By the end of this period, over 100 works of art falling into the portrait category had been entered.

The exhibition was juried by Sally B. Moore, who was brought in by the MAC. Typically, juried exhibitions have one judge, sometimes two. National shows might have three. In the case of this exhibition, Moore worked blindly; she had only the work and its title – and submitted .jpg files, rather than the actual pieces – to judge by. She was given four days to review and make her choices. Of the more than 100 pieces entered, 57 were chosen.

Many entries fell well within the traditional parameters of visual portraiture, while others seem to blend into other categories. Still others don't seem to fit at all. As Lucas explained, Moore wanted to expand the parameters of what a portrait is: from something beyond what you see to what you feel.

Lucas focuses on a striking photo of a man curled up in the fetal position in a bathtub (Mark "Red" Wylie's "Safe Space.") His face is covered; by traditional portrait guidelines, its key element is obscured. Lucas, however, viewing it in a broader sense, saw it very much as a portrait.

"It reflects an emotion," Lucas said. "The essence of being... Beyond the literal, it a portrait can express essence, memory, or personality."

One of the exhibiting artists, Robin Radin, joins the conversation. A photographer with three pieces on display, she took this idea a little further, using the example of a hypothetical subject's bedroom.

"If you compose that in a certain way, that could be a portrait of the person, minus their physical presence, but having something about the essence of who they are," Radin said.

On the opposite side of the room, we're at face level with one of her photographs: a naturally lit, black and white photo of an old woman sitting in an easy chair, the sunlight projecting the frame of the unseen window next to her onto the wall behind her. Her hand is to her chin, pensive. Her headscarf looks Muslim. The title card below the photo brings that conclusion home: "Before the Fast."

Radin described her general method of working.

"I tend to use as much time talking to people as I do actually taking the photographs because I feel like that is how I'm going to get them more intimate," she said.

As Radin remembered it, she made about 40 exposures of Fareena – using a tripod and cable – over the afternoon they spent together in her apartment on the day before Ramadan many years ago.

They had met at an old style pharmacy in Jamaica Plain that had its regulars who would go in to get their lunch and hang out at the soda fountain. Becoming a regular there herself, Radin got to know a lot of them as she was taking their photographs, and soon became more curious.

"I became interested in knowing what their life was like outside of that public space, and I'd ask people if I could come and photograph them at home," she said.

Oaktoberfest 5K and Taste coming to Brighton

The fifth annual Oaktoberfest is coming to the Oak Square Y in Brighton.

Staff Reporter

The Oak Square YMCA will once again be hosting its annual Oaktoberfest 5K Run and Taste this year for its 15th iteration.

Oak Square YMCA Director of Operations Karina Teixeira said originally, it was called the Oak Scare for 10 years and then the Oaktoberfest for the last five. She said the event was created to be a fun and exciting introduction to the Y for those who have not yet been, and grew from a Halloween event to what it is today.

“So we have the race, we have a band that will be here and we’ll have maybe six or seven restaurants as well that will give what we’re calling ‘testers’ of their food or smoothies as participants and residents come in,” she said.

The event was set up as a fundraiser for the Oak Square’s after school programming, as well as the ACCESS program. Teixeira said the after school program helps to give students a bit of an edge in academia, as well as providing some physical activities to help relieve the stress of the school day.

“We do science, math, English, etc... I mean we will certainly support students academically, but we also do physical activities every day,” she said. “Then of course there’s the special events the program holds. We have two school-based programs, one at the Winship Elementary School and one at the Gardner Pilot Academy. We also obviously have our programming here at the Y, too.”

Teixeira said about 200 students use the program every year, and it’s definitely growing and in need for more funds. She added the program is not just for the students, as parents see a good deal of benefit.

“It allows for parents to work, as we can be there as a caregiver when they can’t necessarily get to the school for a pick up at 2 p.m.,” she said.

She added though the program is there for academic purposes, it can also provide social benefit as well. She said the program takes students from five schools from Boston and beyond.

“I would say in terms of making friends, it’s a really big help,” she said. “Kids meet many other kids they may not have been able to know otherwise.”

Teixeira said the event attracts thousands of residents and runners throughout the neighborhood.

“It’s absolutely so much fun, there’s community partners coming in, there’s the restaurants, a live band and the road race, so it’s a great time definitely,” she said. “We have around 400 runners each year, and then there’s people who come to the event to support their family and friends, and then there’s those who just come for the Taste. It’s awesome.”

The ACCESS program, which is also funded by the race, helps parents to pay for Y programming regardless of age, income, ability, race or religion. The program helps anyone based on a sliding-scale eligibility, and the Y states that no one can be turned away due to an inability to pay full fees. The Y also states that the program is supplemented by the Greater Boston YMCA’s Annual Reach Out Campaign and United Way.

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO PEACE AND JOY?

We initially resisted using this space to discuss the evil, horrific mass slayings in Las Vegas.

Inside baseball: routine writing about a tragedy of that sort is easy. Recount the events, express a carefully balanced recipe of sympathy and anger, and top off with a healthy dollop of “thoughts” and “prayers.”

As formulaic as that sounds, the exercise isn’t necessarily banal or uncaring. The sad reality is that events of this sort have become so routine and common that patterns have emerged.

The aftermath of recent events, as easily predicted, is a political debate. In one corner, anti-gun forces with unrealistic expectations of how legislation might stop events like this from happening. The other side, just as stubborn and foolish, will defend any, and all, personal weaponry as vital to their vision of the American way of life. It is telling that NRA-fed Congressmen had to yank a bill legalizing gun silencers at the last minute, lest the optics do more harm than good.

This space, today, isn’t about the Second Amendment. Feel free to continue the terrible dance that strikes up the band after every spree killing on your own time. What distresses up is a far more fundamental question: “Why?”

Terrorism, foreign or domestic, is easy to figure out. There are agendas, philosophies, religious fervor, and blind allegiance to dissect. Evil permeates the agenda, but there is at least some sliver of comprehension to be extracted and inform the battle. An act like this, as random as it is premeditated, is beyond any simplistic analysis. What happened in Vegas is too methodical to excuse as mere insanity, yet too insane to ascribe to religion or politics. Terrorists, although not always in time, can tip their hand. How can a crisis be averted when perpetrated by an otherwise indistinct American holed up in a hotel in a city that prides itself on anonymity?

What is it about our society where such brutality is becoming so common? What can we do when, in addition to grand scale acts of violence, there are the daily terrors of random crime? Every day young men are killing each other in inner cities. Every hour, someone dies by knowingly pumping their blood full of deadly drugs.

Console yourselves if you must with the busy, repetitive work of defending and attacking firearm laws. Offer all the thoughts, prayers, condolences and Facebook offerings of “white light” that make you feel better. None of it matters. The nihilistic reality is that records will be broken. More men, women, and children will die in ever-increasing numbers because someone read a holy book a certain way, or had deadly delusions of grandeur. The thing we pray will never happen again will, indeed, happen again until the incomprehensible cycle is broken.

Everything these days seems predicated on anger. Politics. Neighborhood squabbles. Bullying. Police relations. Even sporting events inspire outrage, sometimes before the game even starts. Something must give. “Let there be peace on earth,” a popular church song urges. More importantly, is the refrain: “And let it begin with me.”

How Boston is helping the people of Puerto Rico

Our thoughts and prayers continue to be with the people of Puerto Rico, those who live here and those who are on the island, as they recover from the devastating impacts of Hurricane Maria. I am incredibly proud to share that we are stepping up as a City to support them in their time of need. Together with The Boston Foundation, we have established the Massachusetts United for Puerto Rico fund, a fund that is dedicated to the relief and reconstruction of Puerto Rico and will support any Puerto Rican person arriving in Boston and the Commonwealth who have been impacted by Hurricane Maria. I encourage residents to visit <https://tbf.org/puertorico> to learn more about the fund.

Together we are sharing the important message to the people of Puerto Rico that we are here to help, for as long as they need. In Boston, we have a strong Puerto Rican community made up of over 32,000 residents. These residents, together with our greater Latino population, make up nearly 20 percent of our City.

In Boston, we know that our strength lies in our diversity. We take pride in being a City made up of people from all different backgrounds, representing many ethnicities and cultural heritages. Diversity shapes our neighborhoods and our identity as a City.

That’s why this month across Boston, and across the United States, we are celebrating Hispanic Heritage Month, honoring the important contributions that members of the Hispanic community that have helped shaped Boston to be the city it is today, having influenced every sector of Boston life, from our culture, to our industries, to our economy. Hispanic heritage is an important presence in our civic life, and is an ever-growing part of Boston’s strength - today and in the future.

We’re doing everything we can to support the needs of the Hispanic community, and all the communities that make Boston such a thriving city. That’s why we’re working together to make sure that every decision we make, we make together. From early education to senior services, we will continue to build a Boston for all.

We will continue to empower the Hispanic community, as well as the strong diversity within the Hispanic community. In this time of national division, cities need to step up as leaders. That’s exactly what we’re doing in Boston. We stand for all our people. We stand for the diversity that makes our City great, because Boston is a city for everyone.

And we will reach beyond our borders to show the same level of support and compassion for the people of Boston with those in need in other parts of the country. We will lift the people of Puerto Rico up through this hard time, and will support them every step of the way. The people of Puerto Rico will always have a friend in Boston.

Please visit boston.gov/relief-efforts for more information about Boston’s efforts to support Puerto Rico, or visit <https://tbf.org/puertorico> to donate.

Italians don't get no respect

This upcoming week, always at the beginning of October, is the usual time for bashing Italians.

But don’t bash the title of this piece because I already realize there’s a purposeful grammatical mistake in the title: the somewhat insidious double negative.

Very few will argue that Christopher Columbus was the first one to land in the New World. Maybe these few are the type who argues against global warming.

Archeologists make the sound case that the Vikings and perhaps St. Brendan were the first Europeans to land here. Some, and I say some, anti-Italians delight in veritabily trumpeting this not-so-new revelation.

And then there is the case that Columbus brought all

My Kind of Town/

sorts of trouble to the Americas - disease, racism, murder, etc. This is not doubted, but who is to say that other European explorers would not have done the same?

Of course, if Columbus had not “discovered” America and opened up the trade routes (and assuming nobody else did), all of us with European ancestry would not be in the United States; we would be squeezed into Europe and everybody with Asian ancestry would be on the other side of the Pacific.

The good news is that there would have been no slaves imported from Africa. Some 12.5 million were shipped to the New World but, according to Harvard Professor Henry Gates, only 388,000 did arrive in the United States, the rest to the Caribbean and South America.

Italian-Americans have made their way to the Capi-

Care to Lax? 617 City Kings bringing Lacrosse to Boston

617 City Kings is coming to Boston for the first Boston Lacrosse club ever.

COURTESY PHOTO

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

While lacrosse has been in Boston arguably for hundreds of years, the sport has proved in the past to be difficult to reach for many in the city.

Some local schools offer it in league play but, for the most part, players have had trouble getting access to teams. West Roxbury resident Paul Sporn said he started the Parkway Youth Lacrosse league to help that, but they could only serve youths up to high school, and then they had to go to suburban clubs to play, sometimes hours away from the city. Now he and local resident Jack Piatelli have started the 617 City Kings Lacrosse club to give players a chance to embrace the sport closer to home.

“The idea is that we’re going to be providing a club option for kids in the City of Boston, all those kids, once they go through a program like Parkway Youth Lacrosse, tops out when they complete eighth grade and there’s no option for them in the city,” said Sporn. “Now we have a city option for residents of the city.”

Sporn said giving better access to the sport will not only allow players to continue with easier travel times, but also allow them to really develop as players. West Roxbury resident, Parkway Lacrosse Alum and current Marquette Golden Eagle player Tommy Von Den Benken said he would have loved to have a local club when he was coming up as a player in the city.

“When I played for my club teams, I would travel like an hour and half to go to practice and we’d only have practice once for the whole summer, like a camp,” he said. “But if I played for somewhere inside Boston I could’ve gotten to practice like twice a week and actually gotten to know my teammates. I didn’t get to know my teammates as well as I could have. I just played with them at a practice for a weekend and then tournaments, sometimes with kids I don’t even know.”

Von Den Benken said he believes the program will take off, as there are definitely tons of kids in the city who want to play.

“I know in the Parkway there are probably a lot of good skilled kids, and then they’re all going to want to try to make the team, especially with the sport growing as it is, they’re definitely going to want to play with the Kings,” he said.

The Kings will set up shop at the Roxbury Latin campus in West Roxbury, which Von Den Benken agreed would be much closer to all of Boston than his other clubs. Von Den Benken also said that he worked with Sporn for many years, and trusts the players will get a good education in the sport.

“I had Paul Sporn as a coach most of my career. He was a great coach, he knew what he was talking about because he played in college and professionally, and he was helpful in getting me on the club teams,” Von Den Benken said. “I’d say he was one of the best of helps to get me here playing at Marquette. He got me big into lacrosse, as at first I was playing baseball and lax, but eventually I decided I liked lacrosse way better and that’s probably all because of Parkway Lacrosse and Paul.”

Sporn said the clubs work more like Legion Baseball than normal sports teams dedicated to a single municipality or school, but added that the schedule should not interfere with school teams, if the player can do both. He said the experience for the players will be unique, as they get to travel all over the place.

“So there are tournaments in the fall and in the summer where club teams from all over the east coast will come to Philly, Baltimore, Upstate New York, Providence, and this is the primary avenue for kids to get looked at and be recruited for college,” he said. “What we’re hoping to provide kids with is an opportunity, but the kids obviously still have to do the work.”

Piatelli said he’s thinking about the coaching for the players, and though he sees some challenges ahead, he feels they are more than ready.

“Obviously I think there will be challenges in the inner city. I think number one probably is the game itself, how familiar the kids in the City of Boston and the familiarity of the game and the opportunities that come along with the game,” he said. “I’ve been very blessed in the lacrosse community since high school and traveled all over the country and coached at every level. There’s obviously also the cost to play, we’re going to do our best to make it affordable for these kids, but we have costs to run the business, coaches, fields, insurance and everything that goes along with running the program.”

Sporn said they are hosting a free clinic on Oct. 21 from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the Reservation Road Field in Hyde Park, as well as try-outs on Oct. 28 and 29 from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the Roxbury Latin School in West Roxbury. For more information, go to kingslax.com/617citykings.

For Favors or Prayers Answered

Prayer to the Blessed Virgin
(Never known to fail!)

Oh, most beautiful flower of Mt. Carmel, fruitful vine, splendor of Heaven, Blessed Mother of the Son of God, Immaculate Virgin, assist me in this necessity. Oh Star of the Sea, help me and show me herein you are my mother. Oh Holy Mary, Mother of God, Queen of Heaven and Earth, I humbly beseech thee from the bottom of my heart to succor me in my necessity (make request). There are none that can withstand your power. Oh Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee (three times). Holy Mary, I place this cause in your hands (three times). Say this prayer for three consecutive days and then you must publish and it will be granted to you.
Grateful thanks. —K.B.

St. Jude's Novena

May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be adored, glorified, loved and preserved throughout the world, now and forever. Sacred Heart of Jesus pray for us. St. Jude, worker of miracles, pray for us. St. Jude, helper of the hopeless, pray for us. Say this prayer 9 times a day. By the 9th day your prayer will be answered. It has never been known to fail. Publication must be promised. Thank you St. Jude. My Prayers were answered.
In gratitude for helping me. —J.H.

Miracle Prayer

Dear Heart of Jesus, in the past I have asked You for many favours. This time, I ask you this very special one (mention favour). Take it, dear Heart of Jesus, and place it within Your own broken heart where Your Father sees it. Then, in His merciful eyes, it will become Your favour, not mine. Amen. Say for three days, promise publication and favour will be granted.

—D.J.

At-Large council candidates debate

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The eight candidates for the four At-Large City Council seats came to the Roslindale Community Center on Tuesday night to talk about the issues currently facing the city.

Challengers Domingos DaRosa, Pat Payaso, Althea Garrison and William King spoke to questions from WalkUP Roslindale with incumbents Annissa Essaibi-George, Michael Flaherty, Ayanna Pressley and Michelle Wu throughout the night.

Payaso, who changed his name from Kevin McCrea, drew the most attention, arriving on his bicycle dressed as a clown with three balloons in tow.

"I'm running a very serious campaign," he said. "Of course the media doesn't pay attention to anything unless you dress up like a clown."

Payaso however, stuck to many issues facing Boston, and said he wants to hold developers accountable to their promises to the city, but also to allow more development to occur. He said he feels – much like Mayor Marty Walsh – that increasing the supply for housing will lower demand and therefore lower rents. He also said that he wants to dismantle the Boston Planning and Development Agency, create an extensive rezoning for the whole city and to sell all unused city properties.

Payaso also said he wants to improve public transportation as much as possible through protected bike and bus lanes. He also wants to advocate for an expansion of MBTA lines, as well as for high speed rail in the Northeast Corridor running from D.C. to Boston.

Pressley said she has been and continues to want to focus on equity in access for city residents, and said transportation is one of Boston's biggest social justice issues. She acknowledged the limited power the council has over the state-run MBTA, but said that bike lanes and dedicated bus lanes would be within its purview.

She also supports more multi-modal transit options in the city, for instance asking or requiring developers to not only put in parking spaces but also bike racks.

Althea Garrison described herself as the lone conservative candidate for the city council and, as a former state representative, wants to hold it accountable to residents.

"You have four At-Large fast and affordable broadband helps us support the ongoing efforts to spur innovation and economic opportunity in all neighborhoods."

The increased connectivity is also aimed at helping municipal buildings and school buildings. According to the city, the increased amount of fiber-optics will go to the city to schools, support the delivery of City services, and enhance public safety communications systems. The Boston Fiber Optic Network (BoNET) was originally set up in 2008 to connect 130 city office through 10 hubs. Since then, the city has used the network to connect more than 50 more buildings and Wi-Fi hotspots since then.

The new fiber-optic infrastructure from Verizon is purported to add to the 26 schools and 38 libraries already included in the BoNET.

"This agreement brings increased competition and choice for broadband and entertainment services in Boston," said Chief of Information and Technology, Jascha Franklin-Hodge. "Providing more constituents with internet options will help lower costs and make internet access affordable to more families and businesses."

Verizon itself stated that it has through this expansion increased the digital offerings for the city.

"Since we introduced FiOS in Boston late last year we've almost doubled available data speed, and now offer our Fios Gigabit Connection service. Our teams are o u t s i d e everyday transforming Boston's technology foundation," said New England Region President, Donna Cupelo.

Roslindale Village Main Streets Executive Director Alia Hamada Forrest said if it can help local businesses compete, the added connectivity will be welcomed.

"Having a dependable internet connection during the holiday shopping season is extremely important for businesses in Roslindale," she said. "I've heard stories of the the internet being down during December, and if Fios can help make that never happen again — then yes, it'd be a major help."

"People can relax and be themselves in a space that they identify with," Fareena said.

In one of the smaller rooms, Radin is relating the circumstances of her high contrast portrait of a black musician playing the accordion by Jamaica Pond ("Slow Boat") when the sound of organized gathering floats in from the main room. Prizes are being awarded: Juror's Choice ($100), three Honorary Mentions (free MAC membership), and the Director's Choice ($75).

Robin Radin and Mark "Red" Wylie sitting in front of Radin's "Before the Fast." The photograph won an Honorary Mention at the MAC Portraits exhibition, as did Wylie's photograph "Safe Space."

She walks in just in time to hear her name called to receive an Honorary Mention for "Before the Fast" right before Mark "Red" Wylie receives his for "Safe Space."

The Director's Choice goes to a sculpture of a ballerina balanced on a warped bicycle tire, the creation of West Roxbury's Silvina Mizrahi titled "Soul's Breeze." Another one of her entries – following the same theme – is displayed close by.

Having trained as a ballerina herself, elements of her experience come through in these two pieces.

"I think that the idea of movement and dance, and the personality of each ballerina came in some ways on the sculptures," she said.

Using the ancient lost wax technique, Mizrahi sculpts in beeswax, after which a mould is made around her creation and hot bronze is poured in, thus "losing" the melted wax and producing the final product.

"It's magical to bring a piece to a place (a foundry) in wax, and then go and pick it up and the piece is in bronze," Mizrahi said.

She didn't submit her entries until the last day; she wasn't convinced that they qualified as portraits. Winning a prize was a very happy surprise for her, obvious from her beaming expression as she is photographed next to "Soul's Breeze."

"You know, it's nice for the soul, because sometimes you are doing this job and it's, like, 'Should I keep it?'" she said.

For Mizrahi – and for many of the other artists here – there's really only one answer to that question.

Portraits will be at the Menino Arts Center until Oct. 19.

The judge, Paul D. Wilson of the Suffolk Superior Court, decided that five plaintiffs did not qualify for legal standing in the case because they were not direct abutters. He also found that allegations of spot zoning could not be applied, as the 51 variances granted for the 64 Allandale did not actually change the zoning laws for the area, which Wilson said was the definition for spot zoning. But Wilson did allow the proceedings to continue based on the impacts the development would have on traffic, density and zoning. One aspect of that part of the case is that for a variance to be granted, hardship has to be shown for the developer, which residents and FAW contends, was not adequately stated.

"We consider it a victory," LaCasse said. "The heart of the issue is still you're trying to put 18 units on two acres zoned for single family... The judge was saying we're not arguing the merits of the case on those issues, but rather on the decision-making process to approve such density."

From here on out, the FAW coalition has stated it may request a motion for summary judgment, which would allow Wilson to decide the case with additional affidavits from both sides. They stated they might also go for a full trial or just ask the development to be withdrawn outright.

FAW member Wilfred Holton added that they will try to bring the case back on appeal for environmental issues later if they cannot stop the development through those means.

"The deforestation of the 64 Allandale property will be extreme if the 18 condo units are built on the sloping lot," he said. "Most of the larger hardwood trees will have to be removed to build the three connected rows of buildings parallel to the slope, and the curving driveway that will wind down the hill. Also the plan for electric panels on the roofs will require removing trees that would cast shadows there."

Holton added that the additional traffic from the development would be a detriment to the neighborhood and increase danger for workers and patients at the nearby Faulkner Hospital.

"The traffic dangers on Allandale Street will be greatly increased with over 40 cars parked on the property that will enter the street just east of a sharp curve, causing a blind spot especially for cars coming from the west," he said. "Now there is heavy traffic during rush hours because the street is a major cut-through for commuters. The legal speed limit of 30 mph is regularly exceeded and the Boston Police are never seen giving speeding tickets there. More serious accidents are sure to occur if the development is allowed."

OVERCOMING ARTHRITIS LIMITATIONS

Nearly half of individuals aged 65 years and older have physician-diagnosed arthritis. While this inflammatory condition can be managed with pain medication, there is also evidence that regular activity can help older adults with arthritis stay independent. How much activity is necessary, you may ask? Even though federal guidelines recommend 150 minutes of moderate exercise per week, few older adults with arthritis can meet this standard. Fortunately, researchers have found that osteoarthritis sufferers between the ages of 49 and 83 who engaged in only 45 minutes of moderate activity per week were 80 percent more likely to improve their walking speed and ability to perform light activities. This is encouraging news for arthritic seniors who want to stay mobile.

The goals of arthritis treatment are to reduce joint pain and inflammation, while improving and maintaining joint function. Staying vital and living well are achievable goals at DEUTSCHES ALTENHEIM. Please call to schedule a consultation and tour of our senior community at 2222 Centre Street, West Roxbury by contacting us today. "Ask about our Schrafft Pavilion for Alzheimer/Dementia Care and Edelweiss Village."

P.S. Physical activity and exercise help combat arthritis by strengthening the muscles that surround the joints and relieving pressure on bone and cartilage.

Ask The Doctor

Junior Damato began servicing vehicles in 1969. He owns a 10-bay auto repair service center in Hyde Park and an 8-bay center in Middleboro. Junior is an ASE-certified Master Technician, ASE-certified L-1 and ASE-certified Natural Gas.

Two Very Different Trucks

You want a truck to drive daily? To tow a car or boat? To go off-roading with? Here are two very different pickups: a Dodge 2500 Power Wagon and a Ford Raptor. Both have four doors, automatic transmissions, A/C, leather interiors, big tires and wheels, very heavy-duty suspensions, and both sit high off the ground. The Dodge is powered by a large, 6.4 liter Hemi and power goes through a 6-speed transmission. The Ford has a twin turbo, high-performance V/6 engine via a 10-speed automatic.

The Power Wagon is and feels like a heavy-duty pickup; the Raptor is and feels lighter. The Power Wagon can tow heavier loads; both are equipped with a 4.10 axle ratio. The Power Wagon is equipped with a factory installed Warn 12,000 pound tow winch. Both have unique bagging and wheels with tires designed for each truck. The Power Wagon has a heated steering wheel, ventilated and heated 10-way power driver's and 6-way power passenger's front seats. Both have a 115-volt outlet, high power audio systems, and large center touchscreens. Skid plates are also part of the under body and mechanical protection on both trucks. LED lighting is on both as well as remote engine startup systems.

The Raptor seems to ride smoother and handles better on both smooth and rough roads. Driving down winding roads, the Raptor does not sway or slide over broken pavement. The Raptor also has multiple driving modes controlled from the steering wheel, including a sport mode that reconfigures everything about the truck including steering feel, transmission shift points and firmness. EPA rating on the Raptor is 15 city, 18 highway MPG, EPA on the Power Wagon is not required because of its heavy-duty status, however, the mileage is similar. Base MSRP on the Raptor is $48,325 (destination fee: $1,195); optional equipment is $14,300. The Power Wagon's base is $51,695 (destination fee: $1,320); optional equipment is $11,400.

The bottom line is that both trucks have all the creature comforts for all seasons and all types of driving. If you need a heavy-duty pickup for a lot of heavy-duty pulling, the Power Wagon is for you. If you want a lighter duty, fun to drive pickup that will tow the majority of items most people have (horse trailers, snow mobiles, etc.) then the Raptor is your choice.

BOSTON BLOOMS WITH DAFFODILS PROGRAM RETURNS

Mayor Martin J. Walsh has announced that the "Boston Blooms with Daffodils" beautification initiative will distribute 20,000 daffodil bulbs this fall to volunteers for planting on public ways citywide.

The plantings will take place in approved locations along the City's public ways on the weekends of Oct. 28 and Nov. 4. Groups with approved planting locations will be contacted by the Parks Department and given bulb pick-up instructions and dates.

Individuals, civic associations, church groups, sports leagues, scout troops, open space advocates, and parks friends are just some examples of the volunteers the Parks Department seeks to help in the "Boston Blooms with Daffodils" effort. Last year over 100 community groups planted the bulbs distributed by the City.

Anyone interested in assisting with planting can fill out a form online at www.boston.gov/boston-blooms which asks for contact information and identification of the public space the applicant is volunteering to plant. Groups and individuals are asked to use their own tools.

For more information on how to participate in Boston Blooms with Daffodils, please call the Parks Department at (617) 961-3006.

REGISTRATION NOW OPEN FOR MAYOR'S CUP SOCCER TOURNAMENT

Mayor Martin J. Walsh and the Boston Parks and Recreation Department have announced that registration is now open for the 2017 Mayor's Cup Soccer Tournament.

This year, the Mayor's Cup Soccer Tournament will be held on the weekends of Oct. 21 – 22 and Oct. 28 – 29 at Moakley Park in South Boston. The Mayor's Cup Soccer Tournament offers local youth soccer programs the opportunity to compete against each other for the right to be called the best soccer team in Boston. Reflecting changes implemented by US Youth Soccer, divisions are now grouped by grade and age.

This year's age/grade groupings are: Grades 3/4 (U10), Grades 5/6 (U12), and Grades 7/8 (U14) with boys and girls divisions for each age/grade grouping. Coaches may register their teams online at: <http://tinyurl.com/2017MayorsCupSoccer>. Registration is open now through Friday, Oct. 13. For more information about the Mayor's Cup Soccer Tournament, please contact Woodley Auguste at woodley.auguste@boston.gov or call (617) 961-3084.

councilors, one was newly-elected, and they all voted for pay raises," she said. "That should have been a no vote. They all voted for pay raises and increased property taxes by 1 percent."

Garrison also said she was 100 percent in support of re-instituting rent control in the city. She also said she would advocate for more bus routes in the city and also for more quality monitoring to make sure they are clean and more punctual.

Essaibi-George has been focusing on homelessness and education in the city during her time on the council. She said she wants to push for more requirements for affordable units to be built on new development sites, but she also said that sometimes taking money from developers in lieu of affordable units onsite can be desirable, because many times the funds are more than the cost of the housing itself.

She also said that the city needs to look more into leveraging its investment in the MBTA to get more favorable conditions from the state.

"It's often overlooked that we as a city have committed and paid to the state almost $200 million for the privilege of having the T run through our streets," adding that Boston is the economic engine of the state. "Not all the jobs happen in Downtown... We need to make sure we're creating rings and not just spokes."

DaRosa said he also would want to work on advocacy for the MBTA, especially for issues facing Roslindale and the southwestern neighborhoods of Hyde Park and West Roxbury.

"We should extend the Orange Line to Cleary Square, it's as simple as that," he said.

DaRosa added that as a small business owner, he has to get large trucks through the city's streets, and the main streets – especially those in Hyde Park and Roslindale – are sometimes too narrow for the large vehicles to navigate. When a bus comes up against one of his trucks, it's an additional 15 minutes of traffic for everyone involved.

DaRosa also wants to look at housing reform, and said though rent control is a very touchy subject he wants to try to figure out a method to fix price gouging by landlords. He said perhaps increasing the lease times from six months to more than a year could help.

DaRosa also said that he would advocate for creating a new tax structure where an owner-occupied rental dwelling would get different taxes than an absentee landlord and also create a structure of percentages that would dictate rent increase rates.

Wu also said that the MBTA needs more advocacy for reform, saying that schools and public safety come in below transportation and commute time when it comes to economic mobility data.

She also said she wants to advocate for more renewable energy, and in this way get the Community Choice Energy Aggregation ordinance through the council (it's currently in the hearing stage).

King said he wanted to work on jobs in the city, specifically to increase the number of vocational options for students in the Boston Public Schools, especially in the wake of GE moving to the city and the possibility of Amazon calling Boston home. He said he agreed with DaRosa in expanding the Orange Line, and said he wanted to work on creating a dedicated bus lane and bike lane on Washington Street in Roslindale. He said he also wants to increase parking requirements for new developments in the city.

Flaherty said he wants to also work on creating sensible development within the city, and pointed to his opposition of several developments in the Parkway he said both he and residents felt were too dense or taxed too much of the local infrastructure. He said he also wants to look into creating more municipal parking within the city, as well as continuing his campaign against handicapped parking placard fraud, an issue he has been fighting in the city for years.

Making Strides

the ACS raise funds for research since 2010. Since that time, her team of more than 30 members has raised $5,000 for research. She's participated in several events over the past few months, including an event in Walpole.

"It's a lot of stuff going on here," she said. "This is my third event in two months, and I'm flying to Florida next week for another event. My dear friend is also a breast cancer survivor and she came up last year and did this walk with me so I told her I'm going down next year to walk with you. Little did I realize I was going to have all these other events cropping up, like Norwood Day, today's Strides, Walpole, so it's been kind of crazy."

DiFlaminies said it's going to be refreshing to participate in an event she did not have to organize herself.

"I'm looking forward to going to Florida, because I don't have to plan anything, it's just going to four days in the sun walking with my girls and representing Robin's Breast Friends and Boston," she said.

DiFlaminies was originally diagnosed with breast cancer in 2008, and underwent surgery to have the mass removed. Later, her doctor called her and said she had Stage 1 Invasive Ductal Carcinoma.

"I underwent numerous tests and surgeries before I found out I had breast cancer," she said. "All I heard was 'you have breast cancer,' it didn't matter what kind. The following months were filled with more surgeries, countless tests, chemotherapy and radiation treatment."

DiFlaminies said it was only with the support of those around her that she was able to make it through.

"As scared as I was by this diagnosis, I could not have gotten through this difficult time without the love and support of my friends and family," she said. "I couldn't let them see how terrified I was, I was a single mother at the time and had to stay strong for my two boys."

It was in 2010 when she was told she was in remission, she said she decided to do something to help those facing what she faced and formed Robin's Breast Friends.

"This is my chance to give back and help others less fortunate than I," she said.

DiFlaminies went on to say that in 2012, her oncologist said that in 2008, she had actually had another type of breast cancer that was treated that they did not see initially called Triple Negative Breast Cancer. The process of treatment after that was extensive, but even though initial test came back with negative results, DiFlaminies said she elected to take further action.

"It was at this point my doctor me I fit the criteria for the BRCA1 gene, and I agreed to do the test because I didn't think it was going to come back positive," she said. "There's no history of breast cancer in my family. The results came back, and I was stunned to learn that I had tested positive. This diagnosis led me to the decision to have a bilateral mastectomy as a preventative measure. By the end of October 2013, I had the bilateral mastectomy, and I was told after surgery that they did not find any cancer. I knew I had made the right decision. One week later I received a phone call from the doctor's office with the pathology report. They had found a tumor in my right breast."

She said she underwent chemo again for an entire year, but she said she came out on top and that this past August, her oncologist office called to tell her she would not have to come in again for the foreseeable future. DiFlaminies said she has won against cancer herself twice, but has had to fight it for the benefit of her son Chuck in 1998 as well. She said her victories and those of her family and others are proof of her convictions.

"Chuck turned 31 last week, and has been cancer-free for 20 years. I thank my friends, family members and God for standing beside me and helping me along the way with this difficult journey," she said. "Without them, I would never have been able to face this disease three times or beat it on my own, there was no way it was going to happen... Never, ever give up the fight."

Executive Director for the Eastern New England Cancer Society Holly Grant was one of the main organizers of the event, and she said this year's participation was amazing.

"We had a great turnout, we've had a beautiful day and some really passionate supporters," she said. "We've got a lot of people who started with us 25 years ago who are still walking with us. It's just incredibly powerful, it's one of my favorite days of the year, truly. I got involved with the ACS because of breast cancer in my family, a lot of us have been diagnosed, and this is just such a celebration of so many people who survived the disease and we celebrate them and we remember those who have been lost as well."

"The money that's been raised today provides critical support our cancer research program, we have $11 million currently invested right now for breast cancer research here in Massachusetts, we have $62 million nationwide, and the funds also support our patients services programs."

Debbie Morrison came out with her daughters and friends Elsie Lisle and Renee Palmer from Dorchester for the 13th year this year, and Morrison said it's been a great time. Morrison herself has been in remission for that time.

whole on our tight housing market."

The council also unanimously passed a resolution to urge the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency (MEMA), the City of Boston's Office of Emergency Management Department of Neighborhood Development and other departments of the City of Boston to immediately coordinate with Boston area churches, humanitarian organizations and other community actors involved in relief operations in Puerto Rico.

"We must live like angels and produce like the devil," District 9 City Councilor and motion sponsor Tito Jackson said, quoting the first governor of Puerto Rico Luis Munoz Marin. "I believe this is critical in that what we are looking at is 100 percent of the power grid in Puerto Rico is damaged... We need to wake up and learn that this can happen in the City of Boston, but in this time right now, we need to understand that the State of Massachusetts has 266,000 Puerto Ricans. The City of Boston from the 2010 census has 30,500 Puerto Ricans, and Springfield has 50,000 Puerto Ricans."

Jackson also reminded the council that Boston will be receiving thousands of Puerto Ricans.

"People are coming to Boston, and we need to treat this like the earthquake in Haiti, which we know put a great deal of pressure on our schools, on our housing infrastructure, on our churches and our charities," he said. "It also means we need to treat it like Hurricane Katrina, where there are still people who are Katrina refugees, who are living in the City of Boston. People are coming with nothing, simply what they have on their backs."

At-Large City Councilor Ayanna Pressley also brought forth a motion for which the council voted to approve to accept a grant of $857,675 for the FY 18 SuccessLink employment program, formerly known as Youth Works. The SuccessLink program places at-risk youth in jobs at community-based organizations across the city.

"During our budget process, we all advocate vigorously for summer jobs because we all see the value in this program," she said. "As the summer comes to a close, the Department of Youth Engagement and Employment needs this grant to be approved by our body as soon as possible to ensure this program can be effectively completed for this fiscal year and continue for the next fiscal year."

tol but not to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. One recently made it to the West Wing for a week or so, Anthony Scaramucci.

A writer for the Globe, Joan Vennoch, made the point after the Scaramucci debacle several months ago that political correctness would have inhibited comics and news writers from poking fun of him and his nationality if he were of another heritage. She might be correct.

This is not to say that many of us Italians (I'm half Irish, with four grandparents from Kerry and Calabria) do not laugh just as heartily at Godfather impersonations or speech patterns mimicking Italians attempting to master English.

It's too bad that Scaramucci was given the bum's rush - but deservedly so - from the West Wing. Very, very few Italians (are there any others?) have ever received mail there.

Perhaps someday there will be an Italian in the West Wing as a mover/shaker for some president, higher than Minority Leader of the House Nancy Pelosi, or even in the oval office itself.

But until that time we Italians and even those of us who are part Italian take some pride in recalling the local political accomplishments of Menino, Cellucci, and Volpe.

Before I worked at Northeastern, I had a job as a medical assistant in Brighton. I left because I was paid differently and treated differently as a Puerto Rican woman because my English wasn't as good as my co-workers. I now work at Northeastern full-time, but I still live in low-income housing. I am on the Mass Health Connector. I pay for insurance that provides me with less coverage than I need because I cannot afford anything more than that.

I am sharing my story, but my story echoes the lives of many food service workers on campus that cannot live on a Northeastern salary. Hundreds of food service workers who feed Northeastern's students need public assistance like low-income housing, Mass Health and food stamps to get by.

Last year, Harvard food service workers fought and won big. They have helped inspire us at Northeastern to fight for more. We know our work and our lives have value. We are asking for a guaranteed salary of $35,000 a year for full-time work, the median income in Boston. We put genuine care into the food we make and the service we provide. I'm proud to work at Northeastern and I thank all the students and professors who have stood by us. But, there is no pride in an institution with millions keeping its workers stuck on public assistance and trapped in poverty.

My mother raised my three sisters and me by herself. She is now disabled and I help her with the bills whenever I can. I want to buy a house for her. I want to give her a more stable life in our own place. I see Boston as my home. I don't want to start from zero somewhere else.

We hope the city of Boston will support us this fall as we ask Northeastern to change Boston for the better. Our work and our lives matter to the Northeastern community and the city at large, and we are prepared to prove it.
