On May 1, 2019, City Realty (CRM) returned for a second time in a month to the Jamaica Plain Neighborhood Council zoning committee to present its plans for 197-201 Green St.; a four-story, 23-unit residential building approved by the Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) Board of Directors on March 14. It had a Zoning Board of Appeals date for May 7.

After 90 minutes of contentious debate, the zoning committee voted in favor but with two provisos that had nothing to do with the four-story apartment building with four affordable units.

The debate and provisos had everything to do with the alleged and undocumented business practices of CRM at two rental buildings it owns in Egleston Square-26 School St. and 435 Walnut Ave.

The provisos were recommended by a subcommittee of ESNA and submitted to the zoning committee:

City Council looks at needle disposal ordinance

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

During last week's Boston City Council Meeting, At-Large City Councilor Anissa Essaibi-George introduced a new citywide ordinance to help residents safely dispose of needles and sharps.

The ordinance would establish the Sharps Stewardship Program (SSP), and would, if enacted, require a manufacturer of sharps and needles sold in the city to be subject to several regulations. These regulations include requiring a manufacturer to establish a collection system to provide "convenient, ongoing collection services to all persons seeking to dispose of unwanted sharps."

Essaibi-George said the program may help to reduce the number of needles in the regular waste stream, as many waste disposal workers have reported in recent years being stuck by needles in trash bags.

"We know the City of Boston and the Boston Public Health Commission (BPHC) have collected hundreds of thousands of needles, and that does not measure the countless needles that we know are ending up in household trash," she said. "We've got

Walk for Hunger hits the Boston Common

Thousands came out to raise money for Project Bread's 51st annual Walk for Hunger. The event sponsored racers for a 5K or a 20-mile slog through Boston to raise money for fresh fruit and vegetables for those in need, as well as community garden programs and health programs all over the region. Boston Mayor Marty Walsh kicked off the ceremonies this year at the Boston Common.

Hyde Park resident honored as first female recruiter for National Guard Find yourself at a community meeting and you might run into a familiar face, Patricia Odom.

Easy with a smile, a story or a helping hand, Odom's demeanor doesn't necessarily lend itself to a military mind, but as it turns out, she spent several years serving as the first female black recruiter of the United States National Guard in Massachusetts.

"I was in the Army about a good six years," she said. "I remember coming out in '85."

Curbside Compost Pickup taken up again at City Council

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

For the sixth time in his seat as the District 6 City Councilor, Matt O'Malley has called for a hearing to figure out how the city could implement a curbside compost pick up program.

"There's a renewed sense of urgency on this, and I can explain the benefits but you've all heard me explain the benefits ad nauseum," he said. "I want to come at this from a different angle, and that is that it is financially responsible for us to go forward with this program, recognizing that there will be some costs up front. The fact of the matter is cities are seeing the commodity, the value of recycling, drop precipitously."

O'Malley was referring to the fact that China is no longer taking the bulk of American recycling material since January of 2018. It was determined, according to Chinese officials, that there was too much trash mixed in, and at that time Thailand and India started taking more imported scrap from the U.S., but with more restrictions, dialing up the cost. Many recycling companies in the U.S. have begun upping their prices to compensate, sometimes by as much as four times what they previously charged. Some cities have reverted to burning the material, like Philadelphia, which is burning half of its incoming material.

"When I was elected to this body in 2010, and my first full budget was in 2011, we were generating a revenue of about $5 or $6 per ton of recycling in the city," he said. "We were paying about $80 per ton for the trash pickup fee. Now the current rate we're paying for trash is slightly north of that, about $85 or $86, but recycling, instead of generating a revenue of $5 per ton, we're paying $25 per ton. We've seen a $30 change. That's pretty dramatic."

O'Malley said it still makes sense to recycle those materials, regardless of the increase in cost, but other methods of recouping lost funds should be considered.

"It's still beneficial for us to recycle more because the cost is dramatically less than landfill," he said. "We're currently of our trash.

"Even though it's only the first full year since they've been citywide curbside composting they've seen a waste reduction looking at the new contract and what we're seeing is a trend in Boston, which has been born out in city after city across the United States, and gets into the weeds about how foreign markets are no longer accepting our recycling, is the cost of recycling is eclipsing the cost of trash and landfill. You've seen over $100 per ton to pick up recycling when traditional trash is still in the high $80s low $90s."

O'Malley said while the City of Boston has committed to not burying its recycling in landfills, other cities are just throwing it away.

"That is a chilling concept. I'm feeling bullish on our chances if we can actually create curbside composting, we can divert at a minimum, 20 percent of 8 percent, that's just in the There are 100 municipalities nationwide that have some sort of a program. Portland Oregon saw their program decrease trash by 37 percent, and San Francisco diverted more than 80 percent of its waste from landfills and they've been doing curbside composting for a number of years."

O'Malley said in 2017 the city collected 190,000 tons of waste and a 20 percent diversion of that would be about 40,000 tons of waste every year.

"Forty-thousand times $89 per ton, that's real savings right there," he said. "Admittedly, there will be a cost associated with creating this program but I really think we ought to pilot it."

West Roxbury remembers Irish Bob Murphy

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

While Bob Murphy wasn't his real name, Edwin Lee Conarty was memorialized on Saturday, May 4, in the form of a public bench along the newly-christened Tim White Way on Centre Street.

The event was organized by District 6 City Councilor West Roxbury Liaison Shannon Murphy, his granddaughter, for Murphy's wife, Ann Murphy. Shannon Murphy said the whole event, including dedications from Boston Mayor Marty Walsh and members of Ann Murphy's family, was a complete surprise for Ann. If her exclamations of "Oh God why didn't somebody tell me?" and "Is that the Mayor? Oh my God!" were any indication, Shannon and her family were able to keep the event secret.

"I'm super excited, my grandmother adored my grandfather," Shannon Murphy said. "She always wanted to keep his name and memory alive and I thought what better way to do it than dedicating a bench in the neighborhood where they lived and raised their children and a place where she can go and think of him."

Shannon Murphy said the city was amazingly helpful in doing the dedication.

"Jack Duggan, Parks Department was a huge help, Chris Cook, Laura Cawley from Parks, everything just came together because of all their help and I couldn't have done it without them," she said.

Shannon's grandmother Ann said she was amazed at the event.

"I am overwhelmed, I mean can you hear me?" she asked. "I don't know where to begin because you're all fabulous. Thank you so, so much. If I start mentioning names I'll forget some."

Ann Murphy said her husband was good friends with Red Sox legend Ted Williams and his daughter Claudia, and she has kept up a friendship over the years.

"This is the lady that stayed with me last night, she is the loveliest and most wonderful human being," she said. "I also want to thank my daughters Caron and Maureen, my grandchildren and my great grandchildren for putting on this wonderful, wonderful tribute to Irish Bob, and Mayor Walsh!"

Walsh himself said he was happy to be a part of the event.

"Let me just say to Ann's family, her children, her daughters, her grandchildren and great grandchildren, you have a very special person leading your family and I think everyone here knows that," he said to the crowd of almost 100 residents.

Ann's daughter, Maureen O'Connor Murphy, said her father grew up in Colorado and came out to fight in Boston. She said he fought in the U.S. Navy while serving on the ill-fated U.S.S. Lexington, an aircraft carrier, during World War II. She said in the Navy league, he was almost undefeated. He also had to swim through shark-infested waters to survive the sinking of that ship during the Battle of the Coral Sea.

"He was also the recipient of the Philippines Liberation Medal, the European African Campaign Medal and the WWII Victory Medal; Dad, we are so proud of you," she said. "It was in the Navy that he took the name Murphy, and as he explained it, 'My grandfather's name in Ireland was O'Conarty, then we came here and it was Conarty. I took the name Murphy because what other name could I use with this Irish face of mine?' Before turning pro in 1945, Irish Bob fought 50 major bouts, racking up 35 KO's, 13 decisions, one draw and only one loss."

Irish Bob finished his pro career in much the same fashion, with a record of 65-11-1, with 57 knockout wins. He famously fought and beat 'Raging Bull' Jake LaMotta in 1951 after moving up to the light heavyweight division after losing the middleweight title to

CLEAN AND GREEN

Let us now praise muddy men.

Last week, the Bulletin reported on how members of the Neponset River Watershed Association, Keep Hyde Park Beautiful and other residents joined forces to help clean the banks of the Neponset River.

Such displays of neighborhood pride are not entirely uncommon, but they are no less commendable.

We quote from the story itself: "A few dozen residents spread out along the river and Truman Highway and collected dozens of bags of trash that included the usual suspects; bottles, cans and plastic, and some other not so usual items, like car doors, TVs and toilet seats."

It adds: "Resident Edward Berry said he comes out with KHPB for most of the group's cleanup activities, and he said it's an ongoing battle to make the group's name-sake a reality. "Every little bit helps, even though it does seem like a monumental task sometimes," Berry said. "No matter how much you pick up, it's always back there in a couple of months, but we just want to keep the waterway clear."

That quote encapsulates why all this is so important and commendable an effort. Hard work may, as they say, its own reward, but this is inevitably-thwarted work. Pull the trash away, more will eventually take its place.

There is, at least, a temporary result. One can also hope that, slowly but surely, a message of deterrence is sent to those polluters.

Too often, talk of climate damage and pollution is met with a dumb shrug: "What can I possibly do about it." That is wrong-headed thinking. The truth is we can heal Mother Nature. Elbow grease is the magic formula.

Bit by bit, average people have been at the ground floor of environmental remissions. Waterways, big and small, do recover. Depleted forests do regrow. Air quality does improve. It is no miracle. Just the result of labor and dedication.

The folks who stepped up to aid the Neponset River deserve any and all praise they receive. What they did is indicative of how we reclaim our neighborhoods from the overwhelming drag of pollution and illegal dumping.

"The Neponset is just such an untapped resource," said resident Scott Kriscenski. "If we could just clean it up it would be a boon to the neighborhood. If you go just a few hundred yards that away in Milton and look at it, it's pristine, there's a bunch of wild- life and it's just beautiful, here and come close to any roadway, it's just littered with everything, there' no regard for nature."

The end of his quote may be heartbreaking, but the optimism in that quote to the Bulletin sums up this, and similar efforts, brilliantly.

When is a drop-off not a drop-off?

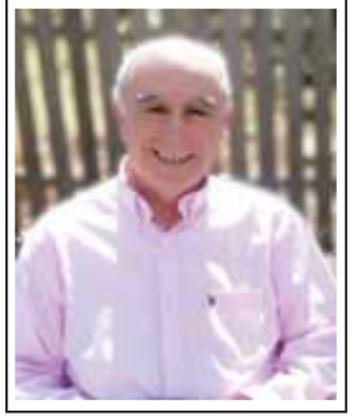

As MassPort—the same semi-public agency that was recently disclosed as having paid 300 of its employees more than $100,000 annually—tries to relieve vehicular congestion at Logan, it has relegated Uber and Lyft drop-offs to inconvenient central parking. The good news is that luggage handling will be available there. Thus a family with young ones in tow will have baggage help reaching their airline. Hopefully, passengers with legitimate disabilities will be dropped off at curbside, saving them from having to navigate walking to their airlines.

As a former cab driver for a few months a number of years ago—Town Taxi, I'm proud to say—I have a loyalty to taxi drivers. Therefore, it is with no small amount of pleasure that I am aware of cabs still having access to curbside drop-offs, unlike Uber and Lyft. But I'm perplexed about limousines having the same, if not more than, the "privileges" offered to cabs.

Limos are allowed where only taxis can venture. This seems to favor the very rich who can afford such transportation to East Boston's primary destination. Thus highly paid athletes, entertainers, and politicians who arrange to be transported by limos do not have to suffer what a family of four heading to Disney has to endure with their central parking disembarking.

True, not every group heading to Logan in a limo is from the upper tax brackets: sometimes people heading to vacation want to start off in an elegant style by hiring a limo and toasting their upcoming getaway with champagne. But for the most part parties heading to Logan in limos are privileged: why should their passengers have preferred getting-out-of-the-vehicle status, preferred over those from their Uber and Lyft counterparts? It is almost as disingenuous as purchasing tickets that allow you to cut to the front of the line at Disney.

My Kind of Town/ Joe Galeota

WISHES ROXBURY PREP HIGH WAS AROUND SOONER

To the Editor:

As a Roslindale resident and teacher at Roxbury Prep, as well as alum of Roxbury Prep, I'm so excited about the possibility of Roxbury Prep building a high school in my neighborhood.

After graduating from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, I landed my first job in the banking and finance industry. But after working for a few months, I realized it wasn't what I wanted to do. I decided to visit an old eighth-grade English teacher at Roxbury Prep, where I attended middle school. My former teacher, Shradha Patel, had been promoted to principal of Roxbury Prep's new high school. After talking with her, she convinced me that teaching may be my calling. She was right.

The reason why I love teaching is the fact that I've been in the same spot as these students. Not only am I a teacher, but I'm also a mentor to these kids. I am able to relate to them, they know my background. They know that if I went through this, then they can do it, too.

Unfortunately, I didn't have the opportunity to go to Roxbury Prep High School because it didn't yet exist. Luckily, I had teachers at Roxbury Prep who helped me apply to private high schools. I was accepted to several and decided to attend the Rivers School, a prestigious prep school in Weston, on a full scholarship. In order to attend Rivers, I rode a bus 40 minutes each way from my home. I wish Roxbury Prep High School had existed so that I could have continued my education closer to home.

I am excited for our students that they have the chance to attend a free public high school that I did not have the chance to attend. They deserve a true high school experience in a single building and I am excited to one day walk through the doors of Roxbury Prep High School's permanent home.

DUDLEY STATION NO DIFFERENT THAN DOWNTOWN CROSSING

To the Editor:

I grew up in lower Roxbury and the South End back when neighborhoods had strong retail districts. I remember Fields Corner in Dorchester and I remember Uphams Corner in Dorchester. However, I lived nearly the Dudley Station retail district where you had many stores to shop with so many products for sale.

Shoppers traveled into Downtown Boston for larger items. However, a lot changed over the decades. Dudley, Uphams Corner and Fields Corner are never coming back to the way it was in 1959 or 1970 and this reality must be recognized by community leaders who are looking for some false renaissance that most likely will never return.

We all shop differently today. Many younger folks shop online. Rarely do they go shopping at brick and mortar stores. Even the malls, which killed downtown business areas, are failing in this current state of shopping we live in.

I recently read that many folks in my old neighborhood are sounding the alarm that 8 storefronts have shuttered their doors up by Dudley Station in under a year. Advocates are signaling the alarm that an 'economic crisis' is at hand and must be taken seriously.

When the City of Boston took over the site of Ferdinand's Furniture store and leased most of the space in the building as the new Boston School Department HQs, it was hoped by local politicians and community leaders that this move would restore life to this once business center of commerce. It hasn't and probably never will do the trick.

HP hosts first ever Roosevelt 5K

Hundreds ran in the first annual Roosevelt 5K fundraiser to help the school pay for learning aides and other necessities. Despite the rain, the race attendance still exceeded expectations.

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The seemingly endless rain of the past week did not deter almost 200 residents from coming out to support the Franklin D. Roosevelt School in Hyde Park.

The race shut down several major roadways in the neighborhood, including Fairmount Avenue. Friends of the Roosevelt School President Amie Luna said they used to host a field day event for the school, but wanted to do something different.

"I think I'm overexcited and happy that the community and school have come together to support us," she said. "It was just under three weeks that we got all of this put together which is absolutely amazing."

Luna said even with the rain, they netted way more people than they were expecting.

"My goal on Sunday was 100 and we surpassed that, it was great," she said. "Now that everyone's on board with the program, I think we can absolutely make it an annual event."

Luna said the funds would be used to procure new computer/mobile applications for the kids to use when they're away from school to hone up on their skills.

"One of the learning activities they do is an online application for reading and math programs," she said. "All of our kids, grade K through 8 will have access to that."

Race Director Macy Donaway, who runs a race timing company with her husband on the weekends, said they've helped coordinate hundreds of races throughout

New England, but being Hyde Parkers themselves, she said they felt it was weird that their neighborhood didn't have anything, until now. She said neighborhood organizer Pat Tierney connected them with the Roosevelt Friends Group.

"We always wanted to do something in Hyde Park, and she sent them our way," she said.

Donaway said they are still waiting on several donations, but as of the date of publication they have raised more than $3,000 from the event for those learning applications for the kids.

"It should be close to $4,000 with those donations coming in," she said.

Donaway said the area of Hyde Park presented a unique challenge in setting up the race. She said they wanted it to be local, but also accessible. She said in order to do that they had to work with the Massachusetts State Police, the Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation and the Boston Police Department. She added that the BPD District E-18 officers helped out especially.

"Sgt. Dan MacDonald understood the value of the 5k race and had been involved in races elsewhere, and he was instrumental in getting the police detail donated for the race as part of the BPD Community Service Initiative," she said. "Just to see that they valued the event and wanted to have something in Hyde Park and were willing to do that was really outstanding. We were really lucky to have Sgt. MacDonald."

Residents from all over the area came out, and not just parents either. Resident Anthony Haley, and chef at Bacaro, said he came out because he believed in the school and his community.

"So people who work at the restaurant had a team and I thought I'd support the community," he said. "We're really tightly-knit here, everybody's coming together and I thought it would be a good one. I mean it's the first one ever. The race was good and the weather kept me cool when we were going too."

Residents Kevin James and Jua Robinson said they Sugar Ray Robinson. Irish Bob defeated LaMotta when he couldn't answer in the eighth round. They had a rematch a year later, for which LaMotta won the decision. Murphy eventually retired in 1954.

"In 2005 Irish Bob was inducted into the Boxing Hall of Fame by Ring 4, the Veterans Boxing Association for his outstanding contributions to the world of boxing and his prestigious career in the U.S. Navy," O'Connor Murphy said. "Ring Magazine listed Irish Bob as one of the 100 top punchers of all time."

Ring 4's Mickey Finn said he met Irish Bob when he was a child, and the impact has always stayed with him.

"My father boxed and they would get together in Jamaica Plain here and there, but I want to say congratulations to Ann," he said. "She's a member of Ring 4 and she's been good to Ring 4, everybody loves her. Thank you! I'm very proud to be standing here today."

District 6 City Councilor Matt O'Malley said he's known Ann Murphy for decades, and he is better for it.

"One thing I've never been able to figure out is that Ann, you look exactly the same now as you did 40 years ago," he said.

not only an opioid crisis and substance use disorders that are contributing to the improper disposal of needles, but we also have those dealing with chronic illnesses and those with substance abuse disorders with needles ending up in household waste."

The ordinance states that the manufacturer may include a collection system of two disposal methods, which may include a mail-back program with prepaid postage, collection kiosks, drop-off day events at locations in the city or in-home disposal methods that "render a product safe from misuse and comply with applicable city, state and federal laws and regulations."

"Most of the needles that were collected last week during our needle take back day involved our residents who are unable to disposal of their needles due to the expense of disposal," she said. "It is important and critical that our pharmacies play a role in the life cycle of our needles and proper disposal."

Essaibi-George added that larger pharmacies would be required to participate in needle take back programs, but she added that there are concerns that such requirements may negatively impact some of the city's smaller pharmacies, and she said she is willing to work with them to find a solution. The ordinance also currently calls for provisions for public outreach and education about the program (provided by pharmacies), a plan for the manufacturer that provides operational and administrative costs associated with the program, while not passing those costs onto consumers.

More than 20,000 needles are found by the Boston Sharps team each year, but that's not enough, according to the City Council.

According to the ordinance, if it is enacted it will allow the city to impose fines of $300 for any violation of the ordinance. All said fines will go directly to the city's Office of Recovery Services. The council previously advocated for drop off kiosks in all mid to large pharmacies back in 2017. During that time, the Mobile Sharps Team in Boston collected 20,000 improperly disposed needles in public areas, and that number hasn't fluctuated much since. Pharmacy representatives said at the time, providing those kiosks would require them to train all of their staff in the safe disposal of needles and quadruple the number of inspections that would be required. They also stated at the time that since the pharmacies are often located at the back of a convenience store or big box store, it would create added safety issues for customers.

Currently, the City of Boston hosts eight locations 24/7 for safe needle disposal, the locations of which can be found here: boston.gov/departments/recovery-services/safe-needle-and-syringe-disposal

REGISTRATION NOW OPEN FOR BOSTON NEIGHBORHOOD BASKETBALL LEAGUE

The Boston Parks and Recreation Department has announced that registration is now open for the 50th annual season of Boston's favorite summer basketball league, the Boston Neighborhood Basketball League (BNBL), kicking off on Monday, July 8.

BNBL is the oldest municipal basketball league in the country serving young men and women in three divisions each for boys and girls: 13 and under; 15 and under; and 18 and under.

Encompassing recreation, sports, and community engagement, BNBL's real value is in helping make Boston happier and safer in the summer months by providing a physical outlet for youngsters throughout the city. Over 1,500 players on 150 teams will participate in this year's league at 20 sites throughout the city. BNBL is played at Boston Centers for Youth & Families (BCYF) community centers and selected city parks. The 2019 BNBL season ends with the championship games played in mid-August.

To register online for BNBL go to https://apm.activecommunities.com/cobparksandrecdepart/Activity_Search. BNBL also offers a free Pee Wee Developmental Program for boys and girls ages 6 to 11 offered at various locations across the city in Dorchester, Mattapan, Roslindale, South Boston, West Roxbury, and Roxbury. This program teaches young players the basics of basketball in a fun and non-competitive setting. Registration for Pee Wee BNBL is done on-site at the Pee Wee locations.

THE TRUTH BE DAMNED

Janet Uhlar: Juror in the Whitey Bulger Trial and author of The Truth Be Damned. She interviewed Whitey Bulger/Thursday May 9th at 6:30 pm/Brighton Library/40 Academy Hill Road/(617) 782-6032.

Janet Uhlar was a juror in the high profile criminal trial of James "Whitey" Bulger. She was transformed by what she saw as corruption within the Judiciary and the failure of the media to take notice.

Her novel, The Truth Be Damned, is based not only on her experience as juror #12 but her extensive research following that trial including two face to face private conversations with Bulger himself.

Uhlar's regular correspondence and visits with Bulger began weeks after the trial ended 10 days before his orchestrated murder. He had much to say. Within their 5 years of communication, Bulger came to accept that within him was a monster — and realize how it was created. Is that why he was murdered? Dead men don't talk..Or do they...?

All are welcome.

Ask The Doctor

Junior Damato began servicing vehicles in 1969. He owns a 10-bay auto repair service center in Hyde Park and an 8-bay center in Middleboro. Junior is an ASE-certified Master Technician, ASE-certified L-1 and ASE-certified Natural Gas.

To the Doctor: I recently purchased a 2018 Toyota RAV4, and am very pleased with it. But one issue I have is that the headlights don't do a good job lighting up the road ahead. Personally, I think part of the problem could be the body design with the headlights placed too far back. I'm thinking that I have three options: adjust the headlights to a lower point; install an LED headlight kit with brighter bulbs; or install fog lights. What would you advise?

From the Doctor: I get a lot of complaints from drivers who are not satisfied with their headlight illumination. There are a couple of options that are not very expensive. You can buy LED or Sylvania high-output replacement lights. There are also small additional driving lights that can be mounted on the front fascia. If your vehicle has fog lights, or a cutout for fog lights, this can make a great mounting area. If equipped, you can sometimes replace the fog lightbulbs with the LED style. Whatever you choose, the bulb you purchase should be a direct plug in, not the older style LED that requires additional wiring. LED bulbs are very bright in color and very cool in temperature. In some cases they are so cool the snow will not melt off the lenses.

To the Doctor: I currently own a full-size pickup truck with 4WD, but I am looking to downsize to a compact truck. Is AWD comparable to 4WD? I like the 4WD for driving in snow. Would AWD react the same in snow and slippery ice-covered roads?

From the Doctor: AWD systems do not require any driver input. Some AWD systems have a button to lock in the AWD system while others do not. Some AWD systems have a center differential that splits the traction from front to rear and others have smart AWD that will send power to wheels with the most traction. I have three AWD vehicles with no problems. The AWD systems of today do not wear the tires as much as older systems and the gas mileage difference is minimal.

Boston's own Junior Damato, "The Auto Doctor" has agreed to field auto repair questions from Bulletin and Record readers. Please forward your questions to news@bulletinnewspapers.com and we will do our best to get your questions answered.

- CRM signs an MOU by May 7 with ESNA and city Life not to use lawsuits that seek damages because tenants paid under the market value for their apartment.

- CRM signs 1-year extensions in court by May 7 to Rita Alacraz, Frezza Herrera, Victor Hugo Gracia and Dora Sandoval of 26 School St. and 435 Walnut Ave.

Long time zoning committee member Kevin Moloney was as blunt as the meeting.

"You're better off going with our endorsement," he said. "A one-year extension is not that difficult. It's chump change."

Jenny Nathan joined the fray with a warning. She also alleged that CRM evicted the two tenants from 197 Green St.

"Address these issues now," she said. "It's best for your future. Work with us now or you'll get more push back later."

Nathan, who is an architectural historian, wants the old house removed to a new location and an archaeological dig because she says it's an historic site.

The normally neutral committee chair Dave Baron is convinced that linking 197-201 Green St. with the rest of CRM's business is justified.

"One big issue is you own so many scattered sites. Converting 2/s and 3's, deliberately skirting IDP requirements. You never have anything to contribute," he said at the April 3 zoning committee meeting.

Baron had not changed his mind on May 1, but he was starting at a May 7 ZBA date.

"You're using a litigation strategy. Using other properties," he said. "You're kicking people out with a litigation game. I really don't want to vote to delay this. I really don't, but City Realty has been difficult to deal with."

Baron-who is usually strict about keeping zoning committee meetings confined to variances-is making an exception for CRM. In the case just before 197 Green St., a large addition to 32 Rockview St., abutters complained about parking, but Baron cut them off; parking was not a required zoning variance.

CRM consultant Jay Walsh asked that the project be approved with a conditional vote.

Baron wanted a reply to the provisos by the end of the day on Friday, May 3. CRM Project Manager Josh Fetterman agreed.

"It may be yes. It may be no," he said. "But our commitment remains the same: to continue to work with ESNA, with the Union Avenue neighbors and JPND. Those commitments stand."

RJ Cross is a new zoning committee member.

"This is frustrating to me," he said before the vote "We just don't want you to be a jerk. People shouldn't have to ask how you operate. You're evicting. It feels malicious."

Fetterman said negotiations with ESNA and the tenants have been going on for many years.

"We set some goals and then it's more, more, more," he said. "Take a 'no' vote. Say I'm a jerk then I won't waste any more of your time."

One positive note was when Fetterman said that a purchase and sale agreement had been signed with JPND to buy 3171-3175 Washington St.

In 2016 CRM proposed combining 3171 Washington St. with 197 Green St. to build a large residential building, but divided the property in March 2018 and put 3171 up for sale.

City Life and ESNA demanded that CRM sell 3171—which had two commercial tenants—to a non-profit housing developer and in the past month CRM has been in negotiation with JPND.

"The sister property [3171 Washington St.] is under agreement with JPND," Fetterman said. "We discounted the sale price [listed at $2.9 million on March 12, 2018]. We've been talking about this for a year. The goal keeps moving. The JPND sale is a big deal."

Speaking to The Bulletin after the meeting, Fetterman said that the sale will close in mid June and that the two business -De Chain auto repair and El Embajador-will remain.

The JNDC was unavailable for comment.

Helen Matthews of Green Street agreed that it's a big deal.

"I'm totally thrilled," she said. "The sale to JPND is an incredible win for the community. A really small but decent thing to do."

But the tone was still defeatist.

Leana Poston from Liz Malia's office attends many neighborhood council meetings but never speaks. That night was different. She accused CRM of dragging its feet. "It's been six years of work," she said. "Rep Malia has been involved. This is unjust enrichment. Totally disrespectful."

ESNA coordinates the subcommittee made up of City Life staff and allies, Alex Ponte Capellan, George Lee and Lisa Thompson; only Thompson lives in Jamaica Plain. They last met with CRM on Friday, April 27 and drafted the letter.

Carolyn Royce chairs the subcommittee and she referred The Bulletin to Alex Ponte for documentation on the tenant negotiations. He did not respond.

Fetterman said that there had been no agreement yet.

"We're working on a future policy to reduce displacement and discussing civil law suits, But we're not going to give up that right."

Fetterman said CRM has given tenant extensions for two and three years with no rent increases and disputes are settled.

David of City Life, who lives at 156 Terrace Street, alleged that CRM coerced the tenants at 435 Walnut Avenue into signing their agreement.

"This is greed sharing," he said.

Lost in the flurry of allegations and accusations has been genuine progress on 197-201 Green Street.

The architects Paula Claridge and Ermelin Molere of EMBARC have made careful refinements to the building; at the request of Union Avenue they have redesigned the main entrance, for example. The height has been reduced over the past three years from six to four stories. The fourth floor has as set back of 11 feet in compliance with JP/Rox guidelines. The cornice matches the adjacent brick rooming house.

The number of affordable units—reduced because of the lower height—is 19 percent, above JP/Rox requirements; three at the required 70 percent Area Median Income (AMI) and one at 40 percent AMI.

Union Avenue demanded and CRM agreed to increased landscaping of trees in the back, especially to suit one rear property owner; tree grates for honey locust trees and wider sidewalks on Green Street.

Also to satisfy Union Avenue, CRM will pay for a working design of pedestrian safety improvements—roadway and sidewalks—extending beyond the CRM property line to Union Avenue and present these plans to BTD for future implementation.

Other benefits include $10,000 for Flaherty Playground, a request Fetterman said was made by the BPDA, and support for ESAC's annual Taste of Jamaica Plain.

Fetterman said that CRM has been in contact with Robin Radin of the JP Arts Council to arrange a call for submissions for a mural on the new building.

Finally CRM, in response to Nathan's request, will hire the Public Archeology Lab to survey the old farmhouse and salvage and reuse whatever architectural features can be removed.

The Jamaica Plain Neighborhood Council zoning committee seemingly has fundamental objections with CRM, arguably the most active developer in the Washington Street corridor.

On March 6, it devoted an entire meeting to a presentation by committee member Max Glickman on what he described as the "unscrupulous" activities of City Realty that he claimed has built "zero affordable units, charges 17 percent higher rents, buys at foreclosure and practices destabilization."

Glickman was not at the May 1 meeting.

have kids going to the school and they wanted to make sure they did what they could to improve their experience.

“I mean, we made it through so it was definitely a good race,” said Robinson.

District 5 City Council Candidate Maria Esdale Farrell (and current education adviser for current District 5 City Councilor Tim McCarthy) said the school creates a community around itself. She said she came to support the race even through her kids aged out of the school.

“You know how once you’re a Marine you’re always a Marine? Well once you’re a part of the Roosevelt, you’re always a part of the Roosevelt,” she said. “I don’t even have kids there anymore but it’s been like 13 years here and it means everything to be part of that community.”

Residents John and Karen May Sarno said they took their time on the course, and were happy to support the local school.

“We live right up the hill and she’s a runner, but she didn’t run today, she walked so I could keep up,” said John Sarno. “We were at my pace today. That’s the only school up there and it looks like they’re a very active school and a nice place for kids.”

Karen Sarno said it was a good course.

“It was also really nice that it was blocked off and there wasn’t any traffic,” she said.

Odom said it was a personal tragedy that motivated her to join up, and she said it was good to get a fresh start.

“I actually went in because I had just lost my husband,” she said. “We had just had our son, and we got married July of ’74, our son was born in July of ’75 and I went in at June of ’76. It was my way of getting out of Boston. It was like, I’ve just gone through such tragedy and the only thing I want to do now is get out of Boston and start a new life.”

Odom said she trained with the regular U.S. Army in Columbia, South Carolina in January of 1977. She said she came back home and felt like going full-time.

“I really liked the military life, and it just so happened that someone in the recruiting office saw me and said, ‘you know you’re just coming home, and you should think about us, we have a full-time army position available and you should apply.’”

But as one might expect, she didn’t have the job right off the bat.

“And so I went for the interview, and it was probably about 15 high ranking people in the room, all men, and I walked in well-dressed with my uniform on and heels – the whole nine yards – and the first thing that came out of their mouths was ‘a lady?’” she said. “‘You need to be home having babies, this is not a job for you.’ I said hire me, I guarantee you I know what I’m doing.”

After about a month, they hired her. She said she shipped out to Indiana for training and then the next thing she knew she was heading out to high schools and colleges to recruit young soldiers.

“I was jumping out of helicopters and doing all sorts of things to impress students,” she said, adding that it wasn’t a parachute jump, the helicopter would almost land and she would jump out. “You go to recruit students anywhere where there’s a big area to constantly talk to get people to join the military. So the helicopter would fly into the school and there I’d be and kids would be like, ‘wow that’s impressive!’”

These tours constituted the majority of her outreach to students.

“You got to remember during that time they did not have social media or the internet or cell phones and all of that so a lot of things they had to do to bring people in would try to get people’s attention,” she said.

Odom said a lot of times she got some push back from schools, but not because she was a woman, but because of the anti-military sentiment of the time after the Kent State Shooting.

“They were like ‘we don’t want that here’ and I would have to convince them that it wasn’t like that,” she said. “And so, after six months on the job, they thought I was the best person for the job they could have ever hired.”

Odom said she had been featured in newspapers and the Stars and Stripes – the U.S. Armed Forces Newspaper – as one of the nation’s top recruiters.

“One thing I did was I was honest about the military, and that was very important,” she said. “Some people would lie about the military, they’d tell people you can do this or that and you really can’t. You have to take an exam to get in and that will inform your career path while you’re in the military. I would tell them the truth and explain to them the benefits. If you qualify, these will be your benefits, but not only that they would see how I had grown in the military, my looks and achievements and people would say ‘I want to be like her.’”

She said she regularly filled her eight person a month quota, and during that time she received a lot of rewards, certificates and trophies. She said she later got remarried and decided to leave the Army to raise her family, but not after attaining the rank of an E-7 Sergeant First Class.

She said last week, the State of Massachusetts sent her a certificate of recognition of that fact.

“That’s how I was brought up, you do something right or you don’t do it all,” she said.

However, mistakes happen, even in the military, and the certificate she originally received said she had only attained the rank of an E-6 Staff Sergeant. She said she had to send the State of Massachusetts her discharge papers to prove her actual rank at the time of her discharge.

“When I saw this, I was like ‘oh no, they’re going to have to do this over,’” she said. “If you’ve never been in the military I’ll tell you, rank means a lot. It means money, it means authority and it’s who you are... ‘I earned that rank and I worked very hard, it’s very hard to get rank in the military and to go in at Sergeant status? That’s not easy. I worked very hard for Sergeant First Class, and you have to respect people and get respect to do that. That’s what the military is all about, respect. You’re in a leadership position, and so therefore, I asked them to redo the whole thing.’”

Odom said she then went to work in the Boston Public School system as a teacher and is now retired from that as well. She said her military experience definitely gave her an air of authority and helped her in her classes. She’s now a community activist and organizer, working with several community organizations throughout Hyde Park, most especially the East River Street Neighborhood Watch.

$1 million gift for Boston's Way Home Fund announced

Mayor Martin J. Walsh today joined representatives from Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company (MassMutual) in announcing the company is providing $1 million of support to the Boston's Way Home Fund to further the city's efforts in ending chronic homelessness in the City of Boston. Since the Mayor first announced the fund, more than $6.2 million has been raised to date, including the $1 million announced today.

The gift from MassMutual was announced at the annual Home Remedy breakfast for Pine Street Inn, a partner of the Boston's Way Home Fund. First announced by Mayor Walsh in January 2018, Boston's Way Home Fund has a set goal of raising $10 million over four years, with funds being used to create 200 new units of supportive, sustainable, long-term housing for chronically homeless men and women.

"I thank MassMutual for their generous contribution and for helping Boston get even closer towards our goal of ending chronic homelessness in our city," said Mayor Walsh. "We are committed to making sure that every person in our City has a place to call their home and build a better life, and the Boston's Way Home Fund is helping do just that."

"We applaud the efforts of Mayor Walsh, the City, Pine Street Inn and all of the Boston's Way Home Fund partners in driving forward efforts to provide housing for every homeless individual in Boston," said Roger Crandall, MassMutual's Chairman, President and CEO. "At MassMutual, we are committed to supporting those who share our vision for a better future and we are honored to contribute to realizing the Mayor's goal of ending homelessness in Boston."

"Pine Street Inn is extremely grateful to MassMutual for their generous support of the Boston's Way Home Fund, and we appreciate their leadership," said Lyndia Downie, President and Executive Director, Pine Street Inn. "This gift will make a significant difference in our ability to create additional housing for those moving out of homelessness, helping to provide a safe, stable environment for men and women to begin rebuilding their lives."

Creating new permanent supportive housing, such as the affordable housing complex Pine Street Inn plans to build in Jamaica Plain, is an important component of Boston's Way Home. Permanent supportive housing combines subsidized rental housing with individualized support services so that people receive the assistance they need to stay housed. The housing is designed to build independent living skills and connect people with services such as community-based medical and mental health care, job training and employment services.

Pine Street Inn, which partners with homeless individuals to help them move from the streets and shelters to permanent homes, operates more than 850 units of permanent and supportive housing around Boston and Brookline, Mass. The new complex in Jamaica Plain, funded by Boston's Way Home, will help Pine Street Inn meet the growing need for safe, secure and affordable long-term housing solutions.

In his January 2016 State of the City address, Mayor Walsh announced Boston had ended chronic veteran homelessness; to date, nearly 915 homeless veterans have been housed. In 2016, the City scaled up its efforts to end chronic homelessness; since January of 2016, 721 chronically homeless individuals have been housed, representing more than 4,000 years of homelessness ended.

Since its implementation, Boston's Way Home has resulted in a complete redesign of the way Boston offers services to homeless individuals. Rather than counting on shelter as the solution to the issue, Boston has moved toward a housing-first model, where an individual's entrance into the shelter system is also their entrance on a path toward permanent, stable housing.

The $10 million raised from the fund is expected to leverage a significant public and private investment.

MassMutual joins leading businesses throughout the city in contributing to funding the Boston's Way Home Fund. For more information about the Boston's Way Home Fund, click here.

Last year, MassMutual announced a multi-year plan to reinvest in its home state of Massachusetts, including an increased presence in both Springfield, the company's headquarters since its founding in 1851, and Boston. This summer, the company will break ground on its new building on Boston's Fan Pier. As MassMutual expands its operations in Boston, the company is committed to strengthening its community involvement through business, civic, cultural and corporate responsibility initiatives. Many local businesses have sprung up in the street-level areas of this restored building and in the surrounding area, but many have failed and many more still face the same demise. Small business was once the anchor of this retail district and there is still hope it can survive there. I am sure the high-cost leases are probably not helping matters when little folks in business have such a narrow line of profit. You can't stay in business if you're losing money.

A local developer has suggested building something called Teachers Place, a development priced for working families, city workers and such, and this sounds good. It would be built upon the parcel of land that once held the old Boston Police B-2 station. Bringing in folks to live nearby can only help with bringing back the prospects of restoring the Dudley Area to some of its past glory. It would be a good step.

The problem for Roxbury remains that City Hall doesn't seem to know what to do about creating a long term vision. There is a Roxbury Master plan but, to date, it seems just a piece of paper with words printed on it.

Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, president emeritus of the University of Notre Dame said, "A vision without resources is a hallucination." I'm thinking the Roxbury Master plan might qualify as a hallucination too.

If we wish to rebuild neighborhood centers of commerce and rebuild Downtown Crossing, we need a vision and the will to do something about the status quo.

More meetings aren't the answer. More will from City Hall is needed. That only happens when citizens demand real action and not more pieces of paper with nothing on it but the same old same old things.

ROXBURY PREP STUDENT RECOGNIZES VALUE OF NEW SCHOOL

To the Editor:

I am currently a junior at Roxbury Prep High School and have been a part of the Roxbury Prep family since I was in 5th grade. I love Roxbury Prep for many reasons. First, in my time at Roxbury Prep, I have learned the value of hard work and the importance of investing in my future, knowing that my academics play a big role in my success. Second, the teachers at RPHS are really supportive. My teachers work incredibly hard to go above and beyond for me, my classmates, and our school. Third, I also recognize that what I am learning is harder than most schools, which helps me be more prepared for my journey to and through college.

I have lived in Roslindale for most of my life. I want to go to school close to my home. It currently takes me 35 minutes to get to school with a carefully timed bus route, but this proposed new building is right down the road. This building would not only be convenient, but it would give us so many things. It is very important for us to be able to build a single high school building because having a home would give us students a sense of community, which is infectious for teachers as well.

I also want a space to learn. Our current classrooms work, but the hallways are crowded and we are in a space that isn't designed to be a school. We do not have a cafeteria, gym, or space we can come together as a whole school. Our teachers and leaders do an incredible job of making it work, but it would be so refreshing to be in a nice building that is meant to be a school. Having this makes everyone want to stay.

Although I will, unfortunately, graduate before the new facility is built, I hope that my younger peers will get to experience this brand new high school facility in my neighborhood. I know that Roxbury Prep will be a great neighbor to the people of Roslindale and West Roxbury and I can't wait to see my peers flourish here.

*Savion Allen-Harding
Junior, Roxbury Prep
High School*

NO KIDS, BUT STILL SUPPORT NEW SCHOOL PLAN

To the Editor:

Of the many fine arguments to be made in support of Roxbury Prep's relocation to the former Clay Motors site in West Roxbury, Bridget Marquis' letter of April 25 is an especially clear and eloquent expression. In particular, her points regarding

(1) the need for development geared around public transit, which this project explicitly is,

(2) schools as resources that benefit entire communities beyond the school-day population,

(3) "diversity and inclusion benefit the entire city" and "cars don't build community, people do" are spot on.

I would underscore these points and simply add that as a resident without school-age children, and thus not a direct beneficiary of Roxbury Prep (at least during school hours), I understand the need in Roslindale-West Roxbury for such a school given the closing of West Roxbury High and the unavailability of that location. Project developers have listened, compromised, and come up with a redesign that will architecturally enhance the neighborhood, and thus I support the project unreservedly.

Communities should be about finding ways to say "yes" to the needs of their residents, perhaps especially with regard to public education – and never more so than now. The challenge of meeting significant community need is rarely risk-free, yet this is a case in which any potential risks are, I believe, substantially outweighed by the benefits.

City Golf Courses
Now Open

Mayor Martin J. Walsh has announced that the City of Boston's two municipal golf courses are now open for the 2019 season.

The City owns and operates the William J. Devine Golf Course in Dorchester and the George Wright Golf Course in Hyde Park designed by Donald Ross. Both have received national accolades as must-play courses when golfing in the Boston area. Golfers can access information on rates, season permits, monthly specials and tournaments and book tee times at www.cityofbostongolf.com.

For updates, the City's golf courses can be followed on Twitter @FranklinParkGC and @GeorgeWrightGC.

In 2018 the City of Boston courses were recognized with the 110th playing of the Massachusetts Amateur Championship contested over five days at both the George Wright and the William J. Devine and the Massachusetts Women's Amateur Championship and President's Cup held over four days at the George Wright. The unprecedented move was the first time in state history that either a men's or women's amateur golf championship was held at a public municipal course.
