Heated debate over potential cannabis facility at City Farm site

Residents came to voice their concerns about the proposed marijuana shop in the American Legion Corridor.

Mary Ellen Gambon
Staff Reporter

More than 65 people engaged in a smoldering debate at the Mount Hope Canterbury (MHC) neighborhood meeting on March 14 over a potential cannabis dispensary at City Farm Florist & Greenhouse at 717 American Legion Hwy.

Attorney Mike Ross, a former seven-term Boston City Councilor and mayoral candidate, led the team from Silver Therapeutics, which presented the proposal for the facility. The team included a number of owners and consultants, including owner Josh Silver, architect David Lee, former Boston Police Superintendent Joe Harris as a security consultant, and equity holder Bruce Bickerstaff.

Bickerstaff is also a member of the City's Zoning Board of Appeal (ZBA).

The proposal includes a building of around 2,000 square feet.

Menino Arts Center brings "Abstracts" exhibit to reality

Mary Ellen Gambon
Staff Reporter

The Menino Arts Center (MAC), located on the second floor of 26 Central Ave., is hosting "Abstracts, a Departure from Reality: Slight, Partial, or Complete," a juried exhibition of works from 22 artists from Hyde Park to the West Coast beginning this week and running through May 5.

The opening reception will be held on Sunday, March 24 from 2 to 4 p.m.

The beauty of abstract art is in the freedom of expression of the artist and in the various perceptions of the beholders. Abstract art first became popular during the Renaissance and surged in the late 19th century with the growth of scientific technology and expansion of philosophy. This led artists to experiment with bright colors, multiple shapes and eventually mixed media.

Exhibition curator Sasja Lucas said that this exhibit differs from past ones in that prizes will be awarded for first, second, third place and honorable mention.

"We had 41 pieces submitted from 22 artists," she said during a private tour with judge Judith Brassard Brown, a professor in the Painting and Foundations Departments at Montserrat College of Art in Beverly.

"I don't like to be judging, because I always seem to be changing my mind," Brassard Brown admitted with a laugh as she toured the three rooms.

Designing the exhibit was a challenge, Lucas said, because of the diversity of types of abstract art. There were paintings, collages, photography, mixed media and fabric works.

"Abstract art offers a wide range of expression," she said. "I arranged them by color, attribute or in some way."

One example is on one wall, where three paintings were grouped by multiple tones of blue as well as the

Contributing to the demise of Boston Trade High School?

When visiting a sick friend at the Deutsches Altenheim (the German home), I happened upon an old man who felt bad about not following his four older brothers into the military during World War II. Too young to wear any uniform, he attended Boston Trade High School specializing in aviation. While he never got to work for the Air Force or at Logan after graduation, he did spend many years at New England Tel & Tel (the old name for the phone company, New England Telephone and Telegraph). He was very grateful for the wonderful education he received on Roxbury's Parker Street inside the huge building now owned and refurbished by Wentworth College.

Boston Trade was an athletic member of the old Boston City League, composed of Tech, Latin, English, Dorchester, South Boston, and BC High. The other Boston public high schools, such as JP and Roslindale, comprised the District League.

In its latter years Trade became a repository for recalcitrant students. Those having discipline problems were routinely shunted off to the school, undermining the capacity of eager students to learn. As hard-working students left, a vicious circle ensued.

My Kind of Town/ Joe Galeota

Boston Trade exists no more: founded in 1929 and closed in 1970, it was replaced by the Hubert Humphrey Occupational Resource Center at Roxbury Crossing, later merged with Madison Park Vocational High School. Trade's track team, especially its sprinters and relay squads, achieved all sorts of athletic prominence, while its successor has achieved a small amount of negative notoriety with a few administrators sporting checkered qualifications.

Probably beginning in the 1990's BPS middle school teachers were subtly advised not to recommend to many students to consider attending a vocational high school: virtually all students were considered college material. In those days students attending vocational schools were considered less intellectual. (Interestingly enough, Madison Park is still vastly underpopulated.)

And it was with keen interest that an article appeared a few months ago in The Wall Street Journal, "Stop Calling It Vocational Training," pointing out, "By placing descriptors like 'vocational' and 'technical' in front of the word 'education,' we generate misleading thoughts about the types of people who enroll in such programs." Written by Virginia Foxx, a North Carolina congresswoman, she states that stu-

WHAT ABOUT SCHOOL SAFETY?

In the newspaper business we often talk about such things as the Freedom of Information Act and state level "sunshine laws." These are the tools of the trade that allow us (and anyone who understands the process), with various degrees of success, to demand otherwise hidden or obfuscated documentation from public officials.

In a perfect world, creating this paper trail would be unnecessary. All you would need to do is politely ask. Ideally, when data is important, the public and press shouldn't even need to ask to see this information widely distributed. Alas, there is no such thing as that perfect world, especially where the Boston Public Schools are concerned.

Earlier this month, it was reported that Eric Tran Thai, 36, of Dorchester, a 2000 graduate of Boston Latin, returned to that school and installed hidden cameras in boys' bathrooms. It appears he did so at least 10 times at that school, and likely in other locations given the 20-terabyte collection of "peeping tom" videos he possessed. The U.S. Attorney's office suggests that he also placed cameras in bathrooms at Harvard, MIT, BU, Northeastern, Target stores, Bunker Hill College and various malls and airports.

Thai has been charged with five counts of sexual exploitation of boys for the cameras hidden at Boston Latin. He faces up to 30 years in jail for each of the five counts.

Is your blood boiling? Well, it gets even worse.

School officials knew about the bathroom videos and hidden cameras a year ago. Parents and students, however, were only informed this month, and quite possibly only because legal proceedings couldn't be kept under wraps.

Two questions must be answered by school officials. First and foremost, what security measures are in place at local schools, especially Boston Latin. In an age of bold sexual predators, and where gunmen all-too-commonly shoot up schools, a grown man, alumni or not, should not be able to so easily wander the halls and bathrooms. What protocol was in place or should have been in place? If there was one, why did it fail?

The question also needs to be asked as to why school officials hid the situation from the public. Claiming an "ongoing investigation" or "legal proceedings" is an unworthy rationale. Parents and students should have been immediately notified. On-site councilors should have been made readily available.

Heads should roll.

If the Mayor and School Superintendent do their jobs at all, there must be an internal investigation to determine the answers to the questions we proposed. Barring the unforeseen or unusual circumstances, those answers should mean that people are fired.

These are serious breaches of the public trust and even more serious threats to our student population. Lame excuses and shoulder shrugs will not be enough.

Letters to the Editor

ROXBURY PREP WILL BE VALUABLE ASSET

To the Editor:

I attended the BPDA hearing on Roxbury Prep's high school project on Feb. 13 and was thrilled to see a large and diverse group of Roslindale residents and neighbors voicing their support for this project. I spoke up at that meeting about how I wished I'd had a charter school option close to home when my kids were in middle and high school. While there are some wonderful Boston Public School options, the lottery process is stressful and it would have been nice to have a high-quality public school option close to home.

I believe Roxbury Prep will be a valuable asset to families who want their children to be educated in their community in a high quality academic setting. The fact that this site is so well served by public transit is a huge plus. Students will be doing a reverse commute to school, utilizing the largely empty buses that already travel out Belgrade Ave every morning. With the commuter rail serving the site as well, and 90% of the student body using public transit, I just don't see how traffic is a concern at all. Mass transit is better for the environment and reduces traffic congestion.

Groundbreaking Ceremony at 125 Amory Street marks new era in public housing

Richard Heath
Staff Reporter

Gina Rector is the longtime tenant leader at 125 Amory Street and for three years has attended planning meetings for the renovation of the apartments in the building she lives in.

“When will renovations start?” she asked again at the Nov. 17, 2017 Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) public meeting.

Renovation of all 199 units plus 12 new low income apartments began last Wednesday, March 13 when she stood at the podium with her neighbor Stephanie Coleson at the groundbreaking ceremony.

“I’m grateful. I’m grateful,” she said.

Bill McGonagle, Director of the Boston Housing Authority, called Rector and Coleson and all the other residents who came downstairs “the most important people in the room.”

Bob Ruzzo, Deputy Director of Mass Development agreed with Rector.

“It takes way too long and it’s way too hard,” he said. “But we have to have the dough.”

MassDevelopment was responsible for marketing $37-million in tax-exempt bonds to buy and renovate the building as well as the Federal low income housing tax credits, the latter in coordination with DHCD.

“Eastern Bank bought the bonds,” Ruzzo said. “And AEGON bought the tax credits.” AEGON USA of Cedar Rapids Iowa, a subsidiary of AEGON NV of the Netherlands, invested $25.61 million in low income housing tax credits.

Typical of groundbreakings there was the networking and the thank-you’s all around, but left unsaid was this was the change of an era.

Beginning March 13, 2019, 125 Amory Street is owned and managed by a partnership of The Community Builders and Jamaica Plain NDC. The BHA will own the land and therefore control future land use. It won’t be a complete divorce.

In a statement to The Bulletin, the BHA said, “[We] will provide Project Based Housing Choice Vouchers for all 211 units preserving them for current and future very low income households. The Community Builders will assume day-to-day management of the building and will have certain reporting responsibilities to BHA. BHA will continue to have A direct relationship with the tenants through their voucher subsidies. BHA will continue to be a resource for Amory residents and will maintain contact with the Task Force as needed when they have concerns.”

Still, the BHA has been honest in explaining the new dawn for public housing, as Kate Bennett, Deputy, BHA Director, said at the third community meeting on May 16, 2017.

“The decline in federal funding has created a great need,” she said. “125 Amory Street is one of the few BHA properties that has vacant land with it. This means we can use the land not only to renovate 125 Amory but to include new buildings with a mix of low, moderate and market rate units. It’s been a struggle to maintain the high standard the residents deserve.”

Three new, four, five and six-story apartment buildings of various income ranges totaling 349 units will be built around the existing building by TCB and Urban Edge. Financing for these are still in the application stages.

Before introducing the mayor, McGonagle said that this was the seventh project BHA has on the ground around the city, such as Lenox Camden in the South End and Old Colony in South Boston.

“We’ve always had the support of the mayor,” said McGonagle. “But most importantly, we have his financial support too.”

Walsh underscored the point Bennett made two years ago.

“The lack of investment in housing is sad,” he said. “Monday I was in Washington at two conferences; one was on housing with a bunch of mayors and city councilors, people from all across the country. They said the same thing: there’s no housing policy in the country.”

“We have great partners,” Walsh said, “CDC’s, activists, residents. Thank you. Thank you to The Community Builders and Urban Edge and JPND. Thank you for helping the residents, they depend on this. This house will be affordable for decades. They will be the first in line.”

Councilor Matt O’Malley was all smiles.

“I first came here with [Rep]Liz Malia looking for votes,” he said. “This is a such a wonderful day. This will be one of the best buildings. Energy efficient. New kitchens. It’s done by the Holy Trinity, TCB, Urban Edge and JPND.”

One of that trinity, Andrew Waxman, Vice President of Development in New England for TCB, spoke next.

“The decline in federal funding has created a great need,” she

“This is the first public step in this process,” explained McGuire.

McGuire explained to community members that the CCC Brighton Retail Group, LLC would give a presentation on their proposed cannabis retail store, and then there would be a question and answer session with meeting attendees. McGuire reminded community members that the question and answer session would not include discussion as to whether marijuana was good or bad, since recreational marijuana was legalized in the state of Massachusetts in 2016.

“We are here to discuss whether or not this is an appropriate site for a cannabis establishment,” McGuire remarked. No vote was going to be held during the meeting.

David Pike of the CCC Brighton Retail Group, LLC presented a slideshow about their plans for the proposed cannabis establishment. CCC Brighton is a new company, and most of the key personnel have between 10 and 20 years of experience in this industry. The group intends to integrate into the cannabis market in Massachusetts through cannabis retail stores and a cultivation facility.

“Our mission is to sell high quality cannabis and cannabis related products, providing a level of service customers can trust,” explained Pike. CCC Brighton will be managed by Daniel Gerber and Justin Blair, with the assistance of David Pike and Simon Baker.

CCC Brighton has already purchased the rights to the land for cultivation in Mashpee, MA and is in the process of planning to build a cultivation facility and greenhouse. A Chief Cultivation Officer was present at the meeting to address any concerns with the public.

Pike outlined possible community benefits including job creation, enhanced security by hiring off-duty local law enforcement, and a host community agreement. Three percent of revenue would go back to Brighton.

Traffic was a major concern with many neighbors and community members.

“There is access to every form of transportation on Commonwealth Ave,” stated Pike. “In addition, we will have four spaces of parking.” The store could possibly acquire up to 20 spaces for parking.

The establishment would sell a variety of cannabis products at their store, including concentrates, topicals, edibles, pipes, vaporizers, and recipe books.

Pike also outlined security protocols for the establishment. No one would be allowed inside the store until they have had their ID scanned. He explained that signage, displays, or advertising of products that depict cannabis are strictly prohibited, and that the store windows must be covered or blacked out. “How will you black out the windows?” questioned one meeting attendee. Pike stated that they are not entirely sure yet, but they may use shadow boxes.

One community member asked what kind of “outside security” the cannabis store would have. Pike explained that the establishment would work with local law enforcement to ensure there will be no lines out the door, no double parking on the street, etc.

Not all neighbors are on board with the idea. One Brighton resident, who lives adjacent to 1690 Commonwealth Ave. stated that neighbors had not received enough notice about the proposal. He believes that traffic will become worse if a marijuana shop was to open, and does not think four parking spaces is enough.

To stay up to date with community meetings and next steps regarding the proposed cannabis retail store, email Boston Chief of Staff for Neighborhood Services Edward McGuire at Edward.McGuire@boston.gov or Allston/Brighton Liaison Conor Newman at Conor.Newman@boston.gov.

Boston Bulletin, 03/21/19

Building off his commitment to ensure Boston’s services are easily accessible to all, Mayor Martin J. Walsh today launched a web application, allowing residents to order Boston-based birth certificates directly from the Registry Department. This follows the success of the death certificates online launch in March of 2018.

“In Boston, we’re committed to using technology to make our residents’ lives simpler, and public documents more accessible,” said Mayor Walsh. “Birth certificates are needed by many of our residents, and this new system will allow greater transparency and convenience, allowing residents easier access to their vital records.”

The Registry Department has seen a 30 percent increase in requests in the past year largely as a result of the REAL ID Act; federal legislation passed in 2005. This act mandated that an “enhanced driver’s license” be issued separate from standard licenses to citizens. Soon, U.S. Citizens will need either this enhanced driver’s license or a passport to enter certain federal buildings and to fly in the United States. Here in Massachusetts, residents need their birth certificate to get a license. For this reason, the Department of Innovation and Technology partnered with the Registry Department to ease the process and cost burden on constituents, and the operational demand as we near the federal deadline for compliance with the law. The law will go into full effect on October 1, 2020.

ordering birth certificates online was only available through a third-party service contracted by the state to find vital records, but the average cost per request was typically more than $40, not including shipping and processing fees. In addition, orders could take more than a few weeks to process. As the main source of truth for birth certificates in Boston, the City was well positioned to offer a quicker, easier, and more cost-effective option. Both mail and in-person options will continue to be available through the Registry Department.

Since the launch of the death certificates application, the City has seen online fulfillment overtake in-mail and in-person, and requests are often processed same day. This past February, 42 percent of death certificates processed were ordered online, and Boston anticipates similar efficiencies gained for constituents and City staff processing the birth requests. Birth certificates cost $14 per copy, and that price includes shipping.

“I haven’t been with TCB long,” he said. “But beyond the long term heating, air conditioning, facades and kitchens, is improving the quality of life. We’ll step in as property manager with our co-owner JPND. Thank the residents for this.”

McGonagle introduced Richard Thal, Director of the JPND by saying that making the selection of the partnership was easy.

“Including two Jamaica Plain non profits gave the proposal instant credibility,” he said.

“How sweet it is,” Thal said. “What a marathon! It’s been 150 meetings! We’re the three amigos, but sometimes we’re called the Unholy Trinity.

“This really started with Urban Edge about 15 years ago with Amory Residences next door.”

Amory Residences was built by Urban Edge in 2005, a 64-unit, fully affordable apartment complex built on Amory Avenue replacing an auto tow lot and car wash. “This is something that everyone is going to be proud of,” Thal said. “This will sustain people for decades to come. Many thanks to all the residents of the [125 Amory St] Task Force that held out with us.”

sea. They differed vastly in imagery, with one using circles to depict refugees.

“This is a very strong show with very different media,” Brassard Brown said. “It’s good to see artists so invested in their practice, I am very glad to be a part of this.”

Another talented local artist is Roslindale’s Janice Williams. An accomplished artist, writer and community figure for more than three decades, she is the executive director of the Roslindale Arts Alliance and co-founder of the cable show “It’s All About Arts.”

“I have always been a very creative person, but it took me a long time to admit to myself that I was an artist,” Williams said, noting that she paints, does decoupage and has quilted. “It is always bright and extremely colorful.”

Her vivid collages explode from the canvas in a burst of fluorescent fuchsia, orange and other electric tones, reflecting her jovial nature.

One of her works included street names, including the reference to “Green Street” in her native Jamaica Plain. But there were also “Pink Heights,” “Blue Triangle and “Gold Park,” among others.

“I am not a very good drawer,” she said. “After years of frustrating drawing classes and practice, I realized that my artistic talent was one of creativity and color. Art expression is a daily passion that defines my being.”

Williams also creates birdhouses, which have become popular gift items online and at Roslindale Open Studios and other events.

Artists in the gallery range from all over Boston and beyond. From Brookline, Mark Chadbourne jumps in and from Dedham there is Adele Rothman. Jamaica Plain has a strong showing with Myrna Balk, Sharon Berke, Gail Bos, Dawn Colsia, Elizabeth Slayton and Ginny Zanger. Hometown artists from Hyde Park include Kathryn Collins, Alan DeMola, Lisa Goren and Lucas. Newton artists Tom Hill and Margo Volterra are also being shown.

Erick Gehring, Rob Larsen and Williams are coming in from Roslindale and Catherine Della Lucia crossed the Charles from Somerville. Greater Boston artists include Richard Tranfaglia from Southboro, Robin MacDonald-Foley from Stoughton and Nicole Mordecai from Weston.

Offices will be located on the second floor.

Silver Therapeutics plans to invest "a little more than $1 million into the property," according to Ross.

"The building isn't the sturdiest structure, but we actually want to bring it back to life," Ross said, noting the team also has home ownership rights to the parcel next door.

There have been discussions about teaching people how to cultivate cannabis on the property as part of the business.

"Some of those jobs can go on to earn a six-figure salary," Ross said, noting the potential for up to 70 local jobs. "And many of those people can go on to own their own shops."

He added that it makes sense because there is a greenhouse on site already to teach cannabis farming, which includes "life changing skills."

Team member Josh Ferranto, who has a license to cultivate cannabis in Maine, said he grew up in Boston and knows the area.

"I have some patients who are Vietnam vets," he said. "This is a real passion of mine."

About half of the property would be used for retail space. The entrance would be in the rear, with one entrance from the street.

This hit a nerve with MHC members, who raised their ongoing concerns with traffic and speeding on American Legion Highway. Fourteen traffic lights have been struck recently, making them inoperable. "We are already congested," one member said.

"I'm going to be your next door neighbor," Ken Cardillo said. "It's the last piece of property in the neighborhood."

"If you've ever tried to get in and out of there, you know there's very little public access," one neighbor said.

MHC co-chair Lisa Beatman added that Ross mentioned the sale of both recreational and medicinal cannabis, whereas beforehand only medicinal marijuana had been promoted.

"My understanding was that this is for medicinal use," she said. "Now you are talking about cultivation and adult use. We're not going for anything until we know for sure what you are doing."

"You can't consume or smoke on the site," Ross said, noting that both medicinal and recreational cannabis will be sold. "It would be like walking into a liquor store and consuming liquor. But, for us, the consequences are much more dire."

One interesting part about their product is that the packages will be identified by a technology called RFID, Ross said.

"That way, we can identify who the product was sold to if anything ever happens," Ross said. "That person will be banned from the store."

For example, some residents were worried about children being sold cannabis by customers.

"If, God forbid, a student is found with cannabis in school, we can report it to (Boston Police Department E-18) Capt. Gillespie," Ross said. "We will have the person's information, and the school will have the student's information. The person will be brought to justice."

There will be a 22 percent tax on recreational marijuana, with six percent going to the city. Medicinal cannabis will not be taxed. The business will pay property taxes and a business tax.

The building is zoned in a neighborhood commercial district. It will operate seven days a week.

When asked about the benefits for the neighborhood, the team mentioned job opportunities and the potential for people to learn farming skills.

"It sounds like they are looking for a hapless neighborhood," one member said to the crowd's applause.

Security was of paramount concern to the residents, who were worried about people trying to rob the business as well as their homes.

Harris said there would be cameras as well as a paid detail. Residents asked if additional cameras could be directed towards the street.

"People will be plotting," Dennis Wright said. "This is a mixed-income community."

"My apartment building is right behind the building. And behind my building, there is no fencing," added Ernst Eheart.

"Someone could be presenting you a four-course meal," a resident said of the plan. "But if they present it to you on top of a trash can, would you eat it?"

"There is a stigma that everyone who consumes cannabis is a pothead or a thief," countered resident Angel Rosa, a karate black belt. "In Colorado, since they have legalized cannabis, they have done wonders. They have used the money to give back to the schools."

In that vein, co-president Rick Yoder told the team that, should this proposal move forward, one concession the company should consider is giving a percentage directly back to the neighborhood.

Beatman added that efforts should be made to preserve and expand the greenspace along American Legion Hwy.

"We are here to listen to you," Ross said. We hope you will invite us back."

Ross added that he will go "door to door to meet with people in the neighborhood" to address concerns.

Yoder said he would be happy to have the team come back. However, Silver Therapeutics needs to present a traffic study and a security plan.

The next MHC meeting will be on Thursday, April 11 from 6-8 p.m. at the Home for Little Wanderers, 780 American Legion Hwy., Roslindale. The Silver Therapeutics proposal will be discussed.

This is a win-win-win. Lastly, I like the fact that the school will offer the use of its facilities to the community for events and gatherings. Overall, I think Roxbury Prep is a great match for Roslindale and I look forward to welcoming them to the neighborhood.

CHANGED MIND ON MY LAI

To the Editor:
As an aging Baby Boomer, I remember the late 60s and early 70s oh so well. I remember one of the darkness moments of the Vietnam War when a U.S. infantry company entered a village called My Lai. Led by officers Capt. Medina and Lt. Calley, American soldiers massacred everyone with 504 confirmed dead, mostly old men, women and little children.

As I read Michael Cuninghams commentary, I recalled how American opinion was divided over what happened. As many came to know of the incident at My Lai, many were horrified and many others sympathized with the young soldiers fearing for their lives.

I enlisted in the US Air Force after graduating from Boston English High School in 1966. I was lucky avoiding any time in Vietnam. Eventually I went to college and began my lifelong writing career. I remember that My Lai may have happened on March 16, 1968 but it did not become known to Americans until the media reported on the story in early 1971. I remember doing a commentary on it for my campus newspaper as a 23 year old, and my opinion then sided with the soldiers, blaming commanders higher up the food chain for this atrocity.

However, I do remember 40 years later in March of 2008 when I decided to examine My Lai as a 60 year old. I changed my mind. At this more mature age, I had little sympathy for Medina and Calley and the soldiers who participated in this carnage. I couldn't just blame higher ups because all of us individually are responsible for our actions. We cannot be victims of those above us. Too bad those who led the massacre and those who participated in it excused their actions, blaming others for what they did.

I realized it took me 40 years to acknowledge in print what I didn't see as a young college student. We can't pretend nothing evil happened when it did. We need to acknowledge evil no matter our age or circumstances.

dents with vocational and technical degrees have been viewed as inferior to those who graduate with a BA.

She asks us to consider the language with which students are occasionally described. When students of lesser means graduate from a traditional four-year school, they are characterized as overcoming circumstances, but when students from wealthy backgrounds select a trade school, they are said not to have lived up to expectations.

She indicts that many of us are guilty of class prejudice when talking about education. The word "training" is sometimes applied to voke students. Ms. Foxx is vehement that "training" is for animals; "education" is for students.

The lesson for all of us in today's fragile society is that words have and connote meanings. While in certain religions the mere pronunciation of the Creator's name was forbidden, there are words in American English whose usage incurs instant criticism because they are taboo, sound like, or infer something. With beauty being in the eye of the beholder and hurt being in the mind of the recipient, should it behoove all of us to tiptoe around and not hurt people's feelings with word selection, "training" possibly being one of them?

far, and they starting to expand.

"It's a continuation of Mary's program when she was alive," he said. "The holiday giveaways are still the cornerstone of the program, the turkeys and groceries given at Thanksgiving and Christmas, but we've expanded quite a bit."

Hennigan said they were able to offer more dinners to more families last year and expanded service to Jamaica Plain, adding to West Roxbury and Roslindale.

"We're also looking to give to other causes when we see people who need help," he said. "One of the programs that just came to us was Journey Forward... It's a program geared towards people who have spinal cord injuries, and we've donated to them to help local people in our community who have been injured and need their services."

Hennigan said the Journey Forward group offers physical therapy for people with said injuries, but he said it clocks in at about $200 per session, and is not covered by insurance, so he said it can be a burden for those looking for treatment.

Hennigan said they're also working to raise money for Camp Harborview to help send kids to camp in the coming summer.

"That's something to do on an ongoing basis for families who need assistance," he said.

Hennigan said it's been quite a two years, to say the least, to try to take over for Jacobson after she passed away.

"Its been a roller coaster, but it's also been a very rewarding experience," he said. "Not only for me, but also the people in the WRBPA, and the Mulvey Family. Helen Mulvey-Connors, Tom Mulvey, Matt Mulvey and Mary Mulvey-Kelly, they all truly appreciate everybody who is helping to keep this program going, and it's Mary's legacy we're keeping. She was someone who did it without looking for any thanks and we have every intention to keep this going as part of our community forever."

Parkway Little League is happy to announce that registration is now open for its 67th Spring Baseball Season!

Opening Day festivities are planned for April 20.

Visit www.ParkwayLittleLeague.org for more information.

Parkway LL serves players league-aged 4–12 who reside or attend school within our League Boundary.

We offer the following divisions of play:

- Tee Ball: Ages 4–6
- Single A: Age 7 (age 6 with previous Tee Ball experience)
- Double A: Ages 8–9
- Triple A: Ages 10–12 (non-tryout based)
- Majors: Ages 10–12 (tryouts in September)

For details on season fees, discounts, player eligibility, divisional formats, and to register your children today for the 2019 Spring Season, please visit our website:
