Fr. John Carroll, the pastor at St. John Chrysostom's Parish, is known for injecting a little humor into his homilies.

But on Saturday, April 7, he cracked a few jokes at the Irish Social Club, all in the spirit of raising funds for the church. He welcomed more than 300 patrons to see nationally known comedian Tony V and local acts Jessica Casciano and Harrison Stebbins at St. John's Spring Celebration & Comedy Night.

"It's a wonderful way to bring the community together," Carroll said. "But just don't dance on the tables, because they are not that strong."

Choir cantor Rena Rodriguez was in the habit of being a comedian - literally. She performed "So You Want to Be a Nun" from the musical "Nunsense," complete with a novice hand puppet.

The Boston Parks Department held an ideas session last week at the Tierney Learning Center in South Boston to figure out what is needed for the aging Moakley Park and what could be done to protect it from climate change.

Parks and Recreation Project Manager Allison Pearlman said the park presents the city with unique opportunities and challenges for both goals, and that the city will have extensive meetings; it has also already flagged $210,000 for the design portion of the project

Roxbury Prep rally brings big crowd

More than 500 people came out last Tuesday for a rally in support of the Roxbury Prep High School slated for Roslindale.

More than 500 parents, residents and students crowded in at the Annunciation Church in West Roxbury to drum up support for the construction of a new high school at 361 Belgrade Ave.

The new school proposal is aimed at creating a central location for the high school students of Roxbury Prep, which currently has two high school locations in Roxbury and Jamaica Plain. The problem with these locations, according to students and teachers, is that they do not have many of the amenities some students take for granted. There are no athletic facilities or a cafeteria for instance; the students have to eat their lunches in their classroom.

The proposal would bring 800 students and faculty to the current location of Clay Auto in Roslindale on the Belgrade Avenue West Roxbury Parkway intersection. Last year, many residents flooded a public information session on the project (the school has not started any public meeting process with the Boston Planning and Development Agency at the time of publication) and many residents were concerned with the density of the project and the traffic it could create.

Organizers at the rally stuck with the prediction that students would use the MBTA as they do now, except with the Commuter Rail and buses instead of

Hyde Park Board of Trade helping to close out 54th Exhibit

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Hyde Park Board of Trade (HPBOT) met recently and discussed several issues and new opportunities for the local business community.

Lt. Benny White of the 54th Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry Company A Reenactors came by to talk about the current exhibit at the Menino Arts Center that started in March. The exhibit features maps, documentary photos, and historical excerpts as well as a full tent camp set up for the men and camp followers of the 54th.

"I was absolutely blown away by this," said HPBOT President Scott Batey. "Most residents don't know about how the 54th trained right here in Hyde Park, especially when

Sacred Heart gearing up for 100th anniversary gala

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Sacred Heart School in Roslindale has been celebrating its 100th anniversary throughout the year, that will culminate in a celebration gala on April 27 at Moseley's on the Charles.

Principal Monica Haldiman said the event, entitled "100th Dream Big Celebration", is trying to make the night somewhat of a reunion for former students, current students, parents, teachers and teaching clergy. She said they're expecting to see folks who have not set foot in the Parkway for decades.

"We've been doing a yearlong reaching out for alumni. We have a lot of people coming in from out of state and we've touched base with people we haven't heard from in 30 to 40 years," she said.

Asst. Principal Kate Cody said they've been celebrating the centennial for the school since fall of last year.

"We're going crazy over here, we had our annual golf tournament in September and we had a family fun day for all the students in November,"

Hundreds are expected for this year's Sacred Heart Gala celebrating its centennial.

she said. "We continued with the Christmas Tree Lighting at Adams Park and have had some smaller events and now we're heading into the gala. It's going to be a big night, hopefully with lots of people. We're going to have some alumni coming who graduated in the 40s and 50s, which is impressive."

Haldiman said they are also reaching out to the former Sisters of St. Joseph's of Boston, who were the founding order of the school.

"We're going to have some of the original sisters, well, actually not the original sisters but from as far back as we can go," she said with a laugh. "They used to teach here and they're really a part of our history. We have some people on the committee who can't wait to see the sisters."

Haldiman said the event is going to be an amazing time for the faculty as well as the students and parents.

"As the principal I'm excited that we're continuing the excellence in education and continuing in building on the foundation that the good sisters laid," she said. "I hope we have another hundred years and that that we have something to be happy about and celebrate and spread the word."

The event will feature a raffle, silent auction, fundraising thermometer, a DJ and a photo booth. Cody said there will also be speeches and stories told by alumni about how the school affected their lives and where they took their education to after they had moved on.

"I've been here for more than 20 years and Monica's been here for almost 30 years, so we're excited that this has been so successful," she said. "We're learning about many of our alumni's careers and we have a short video clip from an alum about his career. The pasts these people have gone on is extraordinary. It's so diverse, from police and firemen to doctors and nurses and lawyers it's extraordinary. There are stock brokers too and they're all trying to get us to invest their money with them. We've got heads of colleges and so forth and it's interesting to see where they traveled, but also that they got their start here."

Residents give back to local vets on One Boston Day

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

One Boston Day was created to commemorate the spirit of the city, and asked that residents go out and do good deeds in that mindset before the Boston Marathon.

In conjunction with the celebration of Patriots' Day, Boston Mayor Marty Walsh set up the event to foster good deeds by residents. In that vein, the city's Operation Thank a Veteran Program headed out on a cold Sunday morning in the sleet, freezing rain and snow to thank veterans for their service and inform them of programs and aid the city provides for those who served.

Starting out of the Urban Edge center in Roxbury, one group of volunteers, led by Gavin Foundation Director Roscoe Hurley (and later led by, the group joked, resident Patrick King when Hurley asked him to hold the clipboard for "just a second"), piled in the van to begin their first volunteer mission to spread the word.

"I came to volunteer and it feels good man," one said.

Hurley said his organization has participated before, but this was still his first time and he was a bit nervous about it.

"So last year the former director did it with some staff and volunteers, earlier during Veterans Day the outreach coordinator she did and she enjoyed it, and I heard they were doing it again so I volunteered to do it this time," he said. "I have a couple of members and staff."

Hurley said the experience is definitely a two-way street as he also found it very rewarding. He said the group had been warned that if the success rate of interaction - the rate at which a veteran is home and willing to open their door to complete strangers - is high if you get one in 10 residents. Within the first 20 minutes however, they were already at two in five.

"It definitely feels good. I would love to just see the person's face when you tell them you have something to help them in their life or just get healthcare help," he said. "It's pretty pricey now and not everyone knows you can get healthcare through the program."

Veteran Patrick King said he really loves the city and as a veteran, he thought going out and helping with this program was a no brainer.

"I was in the 10th Mountain Division in the Army and I know what it takes to be a veteran and no matter what you did in the service, I'm just happy to give back," he said. "I know I would appreciate it as a veteran, just someone coming to my door and thanking me for my service; anytime someone thanks me for my service I appreciate it. I like to be able to extend that back to someone else."

After making contact for the first time in that day - just four names into the list - King said it was amazing to sit down and talk with their first veteran, who did not give permission to give out his name.

"He was definitely receptive to it and he's a single father with four boys and it made his day, that's for sure," he said.

The second veteran who opened his door, George Stanton, said he only served for two years in Germany in the 1950s. He said he felt his benefits weren't exactly deserved because he did not serve in combat, but King said he still put his life on the line for his country, and anyone willing to chance death for others is definitely deserving of government benefits.

"No one's done this for me before and it's okay," he said. "You know I keep saying I get these benefits I never really deserved... If it was a different call time I would have been in Korea and been shot at, I mean I lucked out."

"You were there and you were ready if things went down," Hurley said. "You definitely deserve them."

The Operation Thank a Veteran Program goes out once a month to different neighborhoods to reach out to every veteran in the city and inform them of their benefits. It's not easy and not always successful, but as King, Hurley and their group of volunteers will tell you, when it happens, it's definitely worth it. For more information, go to boston.gov/calendar/operation-thank-veteran

Teams of information distributors went out on One Boston Day over the weekend to thank veterans and inform them of the services and benefits the city provides them.

DISRUPTING THE DISRUPTORS

Here we go again. Fresh from a years-long war between local taxi drivers/owners and the arrival of Uber, the next battle is between the City Council and the apartment-sharing app Airbnb.

We have nothing against the modern breed of “disruptive” apps and services. Too many services, for example cabs, have grown lazily invincible from lack of proper competition. Trying to get to certain neighborhoods? No ride for you! Hailing a cab outside of South Station? Good luck with that, unless you can promise an expensive ride beyond the city limits into the suburbs. On a business trip, or simply low on cash and you want to pay by credit card? Duh, “the machine,” as always, is broken.

We did, nevertheless, defend taxi service in the city. We still do. It is a long-established business that has needed to navigate a host of local and state regulations, onerous burdens that Uber and Lyft have no initial need to comply. Rates for cabs were set and legislated; rideshare services saw prices spike or fall based on how busy or in-demand they are.

Over time things have adjusted a bit. Taxi companies are still peeved at the many rideshares stealing from them as a “side hustle.” The ridesharing services, however, do fill a niche, especially for business travelers who need to drop the gamble and hassle of flagging down a cab.

Another battle of industries was always a hair-trigger away from erupting. Airbnb is an app-based service that in a perfect world allows residents to rent out an unused room or apartment on a short-term basis. Just as Uber sought to “democratize” taxis, Airbnb hopes to similarly disrupt the hotel business. Here in Boston where hotel rooms are somewhat scarce and almost always over-priced, the concept has tremendous merit. On the surface, at least.

The problem is that these aren’t pals from out of town. These are strangers with cash and perhaps little else to recommend them as a tenant.

Boston City Councilor Michelle Wu is among those girding for a fight over it. In part, she is responding to complaints that strangers can bring danger when plunked down in family-filled neighborhoods. Landlords argue that Airbnb accommodations violate traditional contracts and bypass leasing and sub-leasing standards. Some fear a day when folks are priced out and pushed out of the city as entire apartment buildings and homes can make more money appealing Airbnb users than traditional tenants.

Wu’s proposed ordinance attacks these perceived problems by defining how much of an owner-occupied dwelling can be rented out.

Airbnb, unhappy with any trespass into their business model, resorted to a mass mailing that accuses Wu of siding with big, bad hotel interests. It also rejected a 30-day limit on housing transactions.

“She has aligned with big hotel interests against the interests of regular Bostonians,” the letter said. “Boston City Councilor Michelle Wu has a proposal that would place unreasonable restrictions on home sharing in the city and we need your help to stop it.”

Wu shot back using Twitter, calling the accusations fake news, while pointing out that no such 30-day cap is in her ordinance.

The war of words should come as no surprise. The Silicon Valley mindset is to pop claws and attack anyone in their way, even if it takes exaggeration and falsehoods to do so.

The fight here is not one of NIMBY neighbors or a city councilor serving corporate overlords. Wu is merely trying to fill regulatory gaps as they emerge and provide the type of ordinance that keeps pace with the times. The fact that Airbnb seeks confrontation over compromise so early in the process tells us everything we need to know about them. Our suggestion: don’t cave in. Tax them, restrict them, and drive them out of the city limits if needed. Any fight they wage is nothing more than shallow threats. They will come crawling back. Wu, and other councilors on her team, are fighting a good fight.

Death of an old man

It was the neighborhood mailman, Said who, daily epitomizing the concern and friendliness that the post office desires in its best carriers, broke the news to me. Gesticulating towards a nondescript house, he merely said, “He passed away the other day.”

I wasn’t standing in front of my own home, where we have lived since 1974 when Said revealed the death: the mail truck was actually near Leo’s house, where I was helping the proud ex-Marine from Gate of Heaven remove some surface roots of trees downed by recent Nor’easters. Said’s news cast a pall on the rest of conversation with the usually upbeat Leo.

A clear-thinking and, according to some, stubborn no-nagenarian, the deceased preferred the accent with his first name to be on the first syllable, “MOR-iss” as in a governor from long ago, Maurice Tobin. Not too many of us abided by his humble request. The rest of the neighbors put the accent on the second syllable, “mor-EES, as in the Bruins’ nemesis in the 1950’s, Maurice (The Rocket) Richard.

I have much to regret about my dealings with Maurice. For decades this fiercely independent codger drove slowly down our street, sternly avoiding and not giving any facial contact or hand wave. The presumption was made that he was just a grumpy old man who resented new neighbors moving in, and hence there was no acknowledgement from me.

of Town/

His house was never a destination by effervescent trick-or-treaters. There were no flags outside his home. Even on the hottest evenings he preferred to stay inside, rather than sit on the front stoop and be sociable. He seldom, if ever, went up to vote. The only visitors he ever seemed to have was The Ride, waiting to take him to a hospital or the Jewish Community Center.

Some neighbors were aware of the tattoos on his 90 year-old arm: he had survived the Holocaust. Perhaps that is what colored his attitude toward me. My paranoia occasionally set in: did I resemble one of his captors?

For decades I, too, never was friendly toward him, never waving as his rode his sedan slowly by our house. Our kids were probably advised to stay away from his house on Halloween.

In the past two years it was only with grand babies being pushed in their carriages that I finally summoned up enough conviction to speak with him. If walking a dog makes for easy conversation with strangers, then pushing a carriage allows two stern men even more so to exchange pleasantries.

The neighborhood’s friendly retired undertaker, George, upon being told of Maurice’s passing, enthusiastically commented that he used to be a hairdresser in Brookline Village; in fact, he owned his own shop. Only Sheila and Mark, who living beside him had shoveled his walk and helped him in other small ways knew about Maurice’s other life. This was news to many of us: this is what allowed him to buy a house and a car; he had a life of contributing to America after he fled the concentration camps.

Until the Grim Reaper comes my way, I will rue the fact that for decades I never reached out to greet the stern old man. A sorrow pulsates in me that more friendliness toward him was not shown over the decades. May he rest in peace.

LYNDON BULLISH ON HYDE PARK

To the editor:

How kind of suburban developers to buy up our “eyesore” property, develop it and turn it into developments that usually require three things: zoning variances, our overview and, in many cases, our opposition. Thanks to the cited developer for his self-described “bullish mindset” on buying up “horrible” Cleary Square properties. Thanks for also “taking a chance” on environmentally-uncertain Hyde Park property and putting forward a “six figure environmental cleanup” on our behalf. We just couldn’t do it without you! Thanks for helping to keep Hyde Park beautiful.

BPD’S COMMUNITY CAM-SHARE PRIVACY CONCERNS

To the Editor:

I am a Clam Point resident who recently became aware of the Boston Police Department’s (BPD) new Community Cam-Share program.

Businesses sharing CCTV footage with police after a crime has been committed and police have issued a subpoena or warrant for the data has been occurring for many years. Sharing video footage of an alleged crime aids law enforcement in arresting criminals and helps keep our neighborhoods safe.

But there are privacy concerns about the new cam-share program that business owners and residents should be aware of.

Police cam-share programs have been popping up across the country under different names like ‘ProjectNola’ and ‘Project Greenlight.’ These programs begin with police asking businesses and homeowners to voluntarily link their CCTV cameras to a police department and, after a year or two, making it mandatory. That isn’t right.

These aren’t typically contracts that allow both parties access to the footage. In this program, BPD retains all rights to video footage from a business camera. Why? Why aren’t business owners allowed to release any footage or still images at their own discretion? What precautions are in place to ensure it won’t be deleted or edited? (columbiasavinhillcivic.org/wp/wp-content/uploads/2017/11/Cam-Share-Registration-FormUPDATED.pdf)

In November 2017, Captain Tim Connolly, commanding officer of District C-11, revealed to the Dorchester Reporter that the BPD hoped to eventually create a city-wide surveillance network using community cam-share cameras (dotnews.com/2017/police-see-catalog-private-security-cameras).

Mandatorily connecting every CCTV camera to a city-wide surveillance center run by the Boston Regional Intelligence Center (BRIC) is disconcerting. It was recently revealed that they have been secretly spying on residents’ social media since 2014 without City Hall’s knowledge. How is that partnering with the community? (aclu.org/blog/privacy-technology/internet-privacy/boston-police-used-social-media-surveillance-years-without)

With violent crimes in Boston and across the country declining or at all-time lows, residents should be asking why we need more surveillance. Boston used to be known as the ‘Cradle of Liberty.’ We need to make sure we continue to live up to that name.

Skeptical abutters view plans for 43 Wachusett Street

Mary Ellen Gambon
Staff Reporter

More than 30 people came to the East River Neighborhood Association meeting on Monday, April 9 at 7 p.m. at the Boston Police Department District E-18 Station in Hyde Park. They primarily addressed concerns over a proposal to erect a two-family residence at 43 Wachusett St., off River Street near Osceola Street.

This is the first of two meetings scheduled about the development of the vacant lot. The property is currently zoned for a single-family home.

Local developer Tim Ahern, who said he primarily works in Dorchester, presented a six-page packet of diagrams and plans to attendees.

"Someone went to the Board of Appeals prior to me about the property," Ahern said. "They never went through with it, so the bank took it over and referred it to me."

The property is 5,024 square feet. Ahern is proposing to develop two condominiums, one on top of the other, with a basement for the lower one. There will be a four parking spaces.

"We made it mimic the look of the buildings that were already there," he explained. "It is designed so families can live there. The units will be for purchase."

While the building is meant to accommodate families, "there is a limited amount of greenspace because of the size of the lot," according to Ahern. "The City zoning code specifies off-street parking."

"Because of the way the deed is designed, there is only one address for the property," Ahern said.

The deed itself may be an area of contention. Because of issues of redistricting in the 1980s, and again during the past decade, the property was originally considered to be in Hyde Park, then in Mattapan, then back in Hyde Park.

"The deed is supposed to read Hyde Park now," said board member Patricia Odom. "The original deed says Mattapan. Excuse me, this is Hyde Park. This is going to create a problem for whoever buys the house."

"We fought for too long to have this area returned to Hyde Park," added an audience member.

"This is right near the big apartment building on River Street," said Grace Peltier, a 41-year resident of Wachusett Street. "There's a bus stop right at the set of lights. I don't think it's going to work on that small lot."

Also discussed was an upcoming meeting regarding the Doyle Playground redesign.

District 5 City Councilor Tim McCarthy addresses the crowd at the East River Street meeting.

However, the location of the meeting had been changed by the time of this meeting. It has been moved to the meeting room at The Shops at Riverwood, 912 River St., behind Perfect Dental, from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. on Thursday, April 19.

At that meeting, the Southwest Boston Community Development Corporation's (SWBCDC) POWHER (People of Hyde Park Wanting Equal Representation) committee will be taking ideas for the redesign of Doyle Playground into a neighborhood park. The Solomon Foundation and Offshoots, a landscape architecture firm, will work with participants on the plans.

Crime also was discussed with police. One resident brought up last week's fatal shooting at Frazer Street, near Ross Playground.

"Any correlation between a drug bust at 40 Frazer Street, and a shooting at 38, is kind of odd," said Area E 18 District Commander Captain Joseph Gillespie.

Wood Avenue resident Nerlande Brice called Wood Avenue near Westminster Street a

"drag strip."

"I just saw Officer Desroaches there," she said. "Before, a car had been pushed two blocks down into my yard, and they wanted to sue me."

City Councilor Tim McCarthy highlighted the many positive community activities happening coming up, particularly with the Hyde Park 150 anniversary in sight.

"It's a shame when you turn on the news, and you hear, 'Here in Hyde Park, this bad thing happened.' You never hear about all the good things, all the diversity we have. I know this is my rah-rah speech, but I have to say it."

Come to Readville and see the rest of history.”

Batey said he and White will be organizing a BOT trip to the exhibit after their next meeting on April 24, which will also be the last night of the 54th Exhibit. White said during the meeting he will be happy to show everyone around and is thankful that Hyde Park remembers its history.

“I want to thank the Menino Arts Center and the local people who got us a venue to put the display and helped us getting it put up. There’s been a lot of people behind the scenes helping us get it up over there,” White said.

White said that, initially, they were only going to set up a few artifacts and maps, but that they were able to set up so much more with just a bit of effort and the support of the Menino Arts Center.

“The president of our organization, when we first accepted it, we said we’ll set up a few artifacts and weapons and let it go.” White said. “He said no: we’re going to set up a whole camp site tents and settings. We got our heads together and when you come over there’s a whole camp site there. We deal with the Native Americans, the Confederacy the enlisted men, the civilians and the officers and we will be doing some drills there from time to time.”

White said the exhibit is open Thursdays from 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. Fridays from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Saturdays from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. He said sometimes the reenactors need to take an hour for rest and relaxation, so if you miss them then come back and you will most likely see them.

Chris Holland, Chief Operations Officer and Executive Director of Inspire Arts and Music, also stopped by to explain his work with Inspire and how it helps to augment music and arts education in the local area. He said Inspire came out of the old Hyde Park Crusaders Marching Band organization, which started here but has now moved on to become one of the preeminent marching bands in the country. He said that, while that is great for the organization, about 90 percent of the Crusaders come from outside of New England, let alone Boston or Hyde Park, and that Inspire wants to fill that music education and performance gap left by the Crusaders. For more information, visit inspirearts.org/.

Reggie Smalls of Security Works in Hyde Park also spoke during the meeting to update the membership of new technology when it comes to business and home security. He said his company, which spans most of the eastern seaboard, works with digital cameras and wireless connectivity to allow residents and business owners to upload their footage to the cloud, which means footage is saved even if a burglar destroys the camera. They also tie the camera system into their own alarm system, but he said that, because of liability issues, they cannot connect an alarm system into an old camera setup

“It also let’s you know if someone is in view of that camera,” he said. “That’s important for packages being dropped off because that’s become a problem with people taking our Amazon or Ebay or whatever packages and all of this can help you with that.”

Thien Simpson, Program Director for Hyde Park Main Streets, said they are still looking for a new executive director and that any interested parties should go to <http://www.hydeparkmainstreets.com/>

Ask The Doctor

Junior Damato began servicing vehicles in 1969. He owns a 10-bay auto repair service center in Hyde Park and an 8-bay center in Middleboro. Junior is an ASE-certified Master Technician, ASE-certified L-1 and ASE-certified Natural Gas.

The all new 2018 BMW X3 M40i

When this car arrived, I looked at it from a distance, and said, “What a great looking X5.” To my surprise, it was an X3. My wife owned a 4.8 performance X5 a few years ago and this X3 has a lot in common with the old X5. Start with the overall design – it is very sleek in style and easy to enter and exit. The rear tailgate entry is also low and the power tailgate makes access easy.

There is ample seating for four adults – five in a pinch. Front and rear seats are heated and firm, with many electric adjustments for the front seats. Steering hub controls, including paddle shifters, are at your fingertips. The 8-speed automatic transmission has multiple driving modes, including a sport mode that turns this SUV into a sports car. There is blue accent halo lighting throughout the cabin and approach and exit lighting that really illuminates the ground around the SUV. The key fob transmitter signals the vehicle as you approach it, so a lift of the door handle and you are in, push the start button and you are ready to go. The heated steering wheel, along with the rear heated seats, and heads-up display that changes from white to orange when the vehicle exceeds the speed limit, are all part of an option package. Parking assist, gesture control, digital speedometer, active park distance control, rear view camera with surround view, sport transmission, and 20-inch wheels, among other features, are also optional.

The M designation brings in a lot more than just lots of power. The inline 6-cylinder engine has been around as long as I can remember and each year gets quieter, more refined and smoother, with better gas mileage and more horsepower – in fact, 335 twin turbo horsepower. The M40i starts at $54,300 (plus $995 destination). Total price with all very popular options is $65,920. If I remember correctly, our old X5 window sticker was in this price range. (There is also a 30i entry model, if we can call it that, starting at $42,450.) EPA: 20 city, 27 highway, combined 23 MPG. The final assembly point is here in the USA in Spartanburg, SC. BMW builds more than just people movers – this is an all-out ultimate driving machine for any season.

Boston’s own Junior Damato, “The Auto Doctor” has agreed to field auto repair questions from Bulletin and Record readers. Please forward your questions to news@bulletinnewspapers.com and we will do our best to get your questions answered.

with the event. He said he has a long friendship with Tony V and the other comedians since he has booked them at Laugh Boston.

It began when the late Mayor Thomas M. Menino came to Tobin with a request he couldn't refuse.

"He called me up and said, 'What are you doing this Sunday,'" said Tobin. "It means you're doing something for him. He talked about having a comedy fundraiser for St. John's. We did it at Roxbury Latin. If the Mayor tells you to do something, you don't say no."

Casciano, a West Roxbury native, wowed the crowd with her feminist take on Boston life.

"I was told men love women with an accent," she said. But I wasn't told what type of accent."

She described her friend with a Southern twang. Then, with her exaggerated Boston accent, she deadpanned, "Which one of you morons is getting me another beer?"

She talked about how being a comedian has led to a lucrative career.

"Yeah, I got a BMW," she quipped. "It's a 1989. I got one more payment to go. My friends ask, 'Does it have OnStar?' I said, 'It doesn't even have power windows!'"

Stebbins took the floor next. A DeRoma Road resident, he knew his audience well.

"I was looking for a parking space," he said, noting the capacity crowd. "Luckily, I left four days ago. I just got one."

Like those before him, he took a religious bent on some of his jokes

"Why do they call it Good Friday?," he asked. "It's a particularly crappy Friday. What about when they turn water into wine. Now that's a good Friday!"

He also joked about childcare for much of his set, drawing lots of laughs.

"I know someone who bought a stove guard," said Stebbins. It's like a plexiglass shield so the kid won't get burned. I got a secret for ya. Just let the kid touch the stove once."

Tony V stole the show. He has appeared in comedy clubs nationwide and on television shows including 'Seinfeld' and movies such as 'The Town.'

He did a running bit about his dad's pacemaker.

"We have to get him a tune up every few months," he said. "Then I was told they are supposed to last at least ten years. I said, 'Have you told the cell phone people about this?'"

When his microphone died halfway through his set, someone in the crowd yelled out, "Plug it into your dad!"

One of his funniest routines was when he described going camping.

"I said, 'Yeah we'll be safe. We'll be in a tent.'

"It's just an illusion of safe. It's a quarter-inch of safe. The bears will say, 'You don't even have to hunt them. They're in a Ziploc bag!'"

He drew big laughs about something Bostonians know well – Dunkin' Donuts.

"They have this Oreo Cookie milkshake now," he joked. "I'm sick of chewing. Any way I can suck it down quicker? Any way you can put some chicken and broccoli in there so I can get a full meal?"

"I really love what I do," said V after the show. "Comedy is really amazing because of the stuff you go through. One minute you are laughing hysterically, the other, it rips your heart out."

V, a philanthropist who has done numerous benefits like this one, will be performing at one on May 12 at 7 p.m. at Giggles in Saugus to celebrate his 65th birthday. It will benefit Boston Health Care for the Homeless.

On a more humorous note, he said this crowd was special because so many people

Residents said the performance was amazing and organizers said the night definitely helped financially.

"And I never had to go on after a nun with a puppet before," he joked.

Rodriguez, who played the nun, said she was thrilled with the success of the event.

"They are all really well-known comedians, and Jessica is from the parish," she said. "And somebody just said to me, 'I had no idea that was you.'"

"I thought this was such a special night," added Casciano. "John Tobin is really the best. He put this all together. And Tony is the nicest guy. Everyone who came was just so friendly to this girl from the neighborhood."

"It was a lot of fun," said Stebbins. "And it's a very welcoming parish. I've worked with Jessica and Tony before, and we always have a great time.

Stebbins talked about how he liked to use a lot of physical comedy in his act.

"I always have a lot of energy," he said. "When I get very animated, it draws the crowd in. When you just move at a certain tempo, you can pause and expect the laughs."

Carroll thanked all of the sponsors, volunteers, participants and audience members for making the night so successful.

"We had more people attend than expected," he said. "We had fabulous door prizes, raffles, great comedians, and everyone had such a good time. It was a wonderful event."

Age Old WISDOM

A BREATH OF FRESH AIR

Staying physically active has been shown to be a boon to seniors' health. Even a daily walk can result in a boost in memory and afford protection against heart disease. Besides these and other exercise-related health benefits, outdoor exercise promotes a sense of well-being and heightened mood. However, all efforts to stick with an outdoor exercise regime may come to nothing if seniors exercise in areas exposed to automobile exhaust fumes and other forms of air pollution. According to a study of the effects of pollution on physically active adults aged 60 years and older, even a short-term exposure to polluted air can cancel the hard-earned benefits of exercise. Better to exercise indoors than in polluted outdoor air. One of the most important factors to a satisfying senior lifestyle is staying active with physical activity. Under the supervised eye of our skilled staff, you can receive personalized exercise programs in our well-equipped fitness center. Please call DEUTSCHES ALTENHEIM to schedule a consultation and tour of our facility at 2222 Centre Street, West Roxbury. "Ask about our Schrafft Pavilion for Alzheimer/Dementia Care and Edelweiss Village."

P.S. "Mall walking" is favored by seniors who want to get their exercise indoors, where the surfaces underfoot are flat and even and the temperature is controlled.

alone. "It's pretty exciting, we don't have a lot of parks this size, especially so close to Downtown that aren't historic," she said. "We have Franklin Park, we have Boston Common with a lot of acreage, but there's a lot of restrictions on what we can and can't do for those parks. This one is not historic, so we can look and see how we can plan resilience with active recreation and what does that look like, and we also want to look at how do you create this sense of space for the local neighborhood and the greater city."

Pearlman added that they are looking to the citizenry for ideas on how to make the park work for everyone. "We're also looking at how do we diversify programming, and so not only do we want baseball, active sports like football, we want to look at how do we engage young kids and older adults and everything in between. Like maybe you're not into traditional recreation, maybe you just want to ride your bike through the park or things like that."

She added that not only will they host meetings like the first one there at Tierney, but also at the park itself with different time windows to accommodate as many people's schedules as possible.

Mia Mansfield, program manager for the City of Boston's Climate Ready Boston initiative, said they are also looking at the dangers of sea level rise the park could be facing in the future. She said for calculated 100 year storms – a storm that has a one-percent chance of occurring every year – the park is in danger of flooding from the ocean both east and north of the park. She said Fort Point flooding could easily get into the park because of how it sits on the land.

"It's at least a one-percent chance every year, so the current flood risk in the near term of 2030 is really centered around the Bayside Expo site which is the lowest line area. Over time though, in the 2050 range, Moakley starts to get more at-risk for flooding based on storm events," she said. "Then the flooding sort of spreads from there into the neighborhoods and some of these road systems. Some flooding comes down from the Fort Point Channel."

Mansfield did say however that they are hoping with this initiative to stop most of that flooding if possible, and that they are reaching out to the community for ideas on how that could be achieved.

"This investment in Moakley Park is supposed to last for decades, we want to address this now. Not only will the park be improved for a better part of the neighborhood but also as a really important part of a flood protection system," she said.

Teen Organizing Group members from the Fourth Presbyterian Church Kayla McKinsey Andrea Sierra and Diana Sanchez said they want to see more day-to-day kinds of improvements to the park.

"A lot of people use the park, and that's why we want to make sure it's a place of safety, and we'd like to see it cleaned up, with more obstacles for kids; we want to put more in and take the dirty things off," said Sanchez. "We want to get rid of the needles, the dog poop, bags, everything."

Sierra said Moakley is relatively dangerous for children.

"I want it to be a safe place; once I was at a shooting over there," she said. "There were little kids there, and we see a lot of needles and a lot of people just going to the bathroom in the open. There are no bathrooms there."

McKinsey said they would be coming back to every meeting they can to make sure the voices of Boston's youth are heard.

"We're in it for the long haul," she said. "

McKinsey said they've also been advocating to local officials for some time now on these issues and hope that this platform for improvements to the park can translate into improvements on the specific issues they've been amplifying in the past few months.

"We wanted a meeting for a long time and I feel like this is a good way to do projects in Boston," said Sanchez.

Coaches Bob Ferrera and Jeffrey McLaughlin agreed, saying they've seen similar problems.

"I think the day-to-day upkeep needs to be a concern more than what's going to happen 20 years from now," said Ferrera. "There are no public restrooms, for opening day for little league and last year the outfield grass was up to your knees, so I mean, that bay over there has been there since the 1700s, so I don't know how much of that is to get up in arms about."

the Orange Line many of them use now to get to the Jamaica Plain location. According to officials, at the time of publication about 198 residents and students have sent 1,200 emails to local officials in support of the project.

Jake Upton, of Upton Associates Architecture, also said they have made a few changes to the design of the school. He said they've widened the turnaround and the courtyard plaza on the eastern side of the site.

"It's so, for at peak times when the trains come, we have a reverse commute going in both directions. But 95 percent of the kids should take the Commuter Rail or buses, and currently the Commuter Rail has 2,000 seats open in the morning and 1,500 seats open in the evening going out so the city wanted to see how do kids get off the train and get into the building. So we opened up this plaza, added more covering and added multiple entrances so people can come around if it blocks up," he said.

Upton added that there will be a ramp on the northern side of the building going west to east that connects the end of the West Roxbury Parkway to Belgrade in a quicker fashion.

"From an urban planning perspective, this will be publicly accessible and would allow people not have to walk around the building or walk around through the neighborhood," he said. "We've also been able to come up with a design that allows this to be an outdoor courtyard and if we need it for parking, we can do pull in parking or tandem parking as we need it, but we really think that we have more parking than we need. There's underground parking too."

Upton said there are 46 total spaces for the building, not including any of the street parking.

"From our demand analysis it's more than we need," he said. "There's also some nuances on the building with creating a little bit more of a landing area. We've also had some discussions with the MBTA about having the bus stop relocate to right in front of the building and that allows the kids not to have to cross the street and just end up right there."

Roslindale resident Christie Bortolotto said she thinks the school would be a welcome addition to the neighborhood.

"I'm a direct abutter to 361, I live on Rhoda Street, so literally out my kitchen window is the building," she said. "I'm not concerned with the traffic at all, because they're going to have the staggered dismissal times and kids participate in drama, they participate in sports, they participate in tutoring, they're in clubs, so 700 kids aren't going to come out of the building at the same exact time every single day."

The school's design has changed since last year's meeting, with a larger turnaround and more space in the plaza for entering and exiting students.

Bortolotto said traffic is also not a concern for her.

"Because they're high school, they mostly take the T. If parents do drive, then there's probably, I mean I don't know for sure, but there's probably carpools," she said.

Current students Savion Allen-Harding and Oliva Dunlap said they really need that new building.

"I want to take arts courses and meet with college counselors but we need a real space to do this," Allen-Harding said. "I want somewhere in my own neighborhood, it takes me 35 minutes to get to school every morning. This building is right down the road, and I'll get to school on time."

Dunlap said she's looking to get into a tech college, like MIT or Florida Tech or Wentworth, but without a dedicated building, offerings for tech learning opportunities is low for her.

"Though we have computer carts and access to some technology, a new building would allow us to have the resources we need to truly meet our goals," she said. "It would also give our awesome E Sports team a real space."

At other support events for other charter schools in the past, many students came because of incentives provided by the school - homework waivers, free days off, etc. - and Roxbury Prep offered their high schoolers a homework waiver for one class for one day and at the teacher's discretion. According to officials, 10 students took the waiver.

The school has not yet filed with the BPDA, but since the project qualifies for the BPDA Article 80 Large Project Review process, several public meetings will be coming down the pipeline in the future.

LET'S SUPPORT ROXBURY PREP

To the Editor:

I participated in an event on Tuesday night hosted by Roxbury Prep and the community members supporting their new high school project in Roslindale. I was blown away by the support and energy in the room, which was filled with hundreds of people, all in support of my child's school.

I am a 16-year resident of Roslindale and have come to love and care about my community. My daughter attended the Charles Sumner Elementary School, and I have visited Roslindale Baptist Church and was a member of the Roslindale Community Center for a number of years. I'm happy to say that I have seen the Roslindale Community grow over the years. However, I was truly surprised to hear that the Roslindale Community did not have a high school.

As my daughter was entering 7th grade, can you imagine the panic I felt trying to figure out where my child would land for high school? I am truly thankful Roxbury Prep decided to add a high school. Currently, my daughter attends Roxbury Prep High School and has been a scholar with Roxbury Prep schools since 5th grade and is now in the 10th grade. During her time at Roxbury Prep, there have been many ups and downs but, through it all, the school was there to support her as a scholar and me as a parent. I love the staff! They are current, excited and informative. I can feel the care and concern for my child, as well as for RPHS. The excitement they bring has affirmed my commitment to help Roxbury Preparatory High School become a reality in Roslindale.

Currently, Roxbury Prep High School is split between two campuses that are over three miles apart. In an effort to come together as a school under one roof, Roxbury Prep is seeking to build a new facility at 361 Belgrade Ave. in Roslindale. I support this project because I know the staff and students will be a positive addition to our community. Roxbury Prep is a high performing school; they hold their students and staff to high standards. No matter the time of day, when you see a RPHS scholar, you will know it because all of our students wear logo uniforms – whether it's morning or afternoon.

I am asking my fellow neighbors to support the new Roxbury Prep Roslindale High School. Our students deserve a new school and the Roslindale site is a great location for them to continue to learn and grow. Nothing would mean more to me than to have my child attend high school in the same community I love and serve.
