Verizon FIOS Expanding

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The City of Boston and the Verizon telecommunications company announced a new agreement last week that would double the areas of the city served by the company's fiber-optic network.

The company initially began its foray into the city at the end of last year, starting construction in Dorchester, Dudley Square and West Roxbury after an agreement reached in April of 2016 to replace the city's copper-based infrastructure with the new technology. This new amendment to the agreement will bring the company's coverage from 28 percent of the city to 56 percent, bringing service to all of Jamaica Plain, Hyde Park, Mattapan, Roslindale and Roxbury. The agreement will also bring partial service to South Boston and the South Boston Waterfront.

"We are a proud partner in expanding access to broadband choice to more Boston neighborhoods and communities," said Boston Mayor Walsh. "Providing constituents with fast and affordable broadband helps us support the ongoing efforts to spur innovation and economic opportunity in all neighborhoods."

Brainstorming session held for Hyde Park's 150th anniversary

More than a dozen residents came by to discuss and give out ideas for the celebration of Hyde Park and its 150 years.

Trenese Franklin
Staff Reporter

On Sept. 27, the CEOs of SC Group, Scott Smith and Michele Consalvo, hosted a brainstorming session for Hyde Park's 150th Anniversary.

The session was geared towards developing ideas for events and activities that the community would like to see take place to celebrate Hyde Park's 150th year.

"I want to make sure that everyone fully understands that there is nothing planned, it starts with brainstorming and tonight is just the start," Smith said.

Both Consalvo and Smith explained the purpose of the brainstorming session. The objective was to build ideas and to hopefully get people to join the five to seven committees that will immediately form at the end of October.

"We have 40-plus people here tonight and we had 40-plus the other night; we're going to have literally hundreds of people - I hope - volunteering for this," Smith said.

Consalvo presented the agenda to the audience and went over key steps on how the session would be broken down. To help with organizing the ideas of those in attendance, the participants were broken into two groups. For each group, there were six posters, with six categories taped to the walls on two separate ends of the room. Provided on everyone's chair were yellow sticky pads and pens to write down their ideas. The purpose for the session participants was to write down the activities they'd like to see on the sticky notes for each category and stick them onto the white posters taped to the walls.

Before participants were broken up into their groups to brainstorm, Smith told people what he was looking for.

"I want you all to think grandiose, think as big as you possibly can," he said.

The categories provided were family, children, adult, seniors, historical and celebration. Smith explained that some of the core values for this celebration were to build a sense of community pride and to also increase volunteerism and create memories. The goal

YMCA hosts ribbon cutting for new pocket park

On Monday, Sept. 18, the Thomas M. Menino YMCA held a ribbon cutting ceremony for its new “pocket park” located at its front entrance. In a collaborative effort and with the help of many community partners including District 5 City Councilor Tim McCarthy, the Y and Wentworth Institute of Technology were able to officially open their community space and dedicate it to those who helped make it happen. This space is for the community as a whole.

Doyle Day undeterred by rain

Local residents, the Mission Continues volunteers, and the DCR braved torrential rains to clear brush from the Doyle Playground in order to prepare it for further development before the winter comes.

Matt MacDonald
Staff Reporter

This past Saturday morning, Sept. 30, the transformation of Doyle Playground (located on River Street, opposite Rosa Street) began in a deluge of rain that began just before the scheduled start time.

Nonetheless, members of Southwest Boston Community Development Corporation (SWBCDC), POHWER (People of Hyde Park Wanting Equal Representation), The Mission Continues veterans volunteer group, the Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR), and a small but intrepid group of Hyde Park residents showed up at the appointed time – dressed for the weather and the work – picked up landscaping tools, and slogged out into the vacant and increasingly-muddy lot.

The job description was basic: clear brush from the site’s fenced and walled perimeter. However, the simplicity of the task being carried out belied the greater importance of the act itself: continuing the process of restoring this long-neglected place (there was no trace of an actual playground anywhere) to again be an asset to the neighborhood.

Coordinating this effort was SWBCDC Community Organizer Alex Nadel, who spent a good part of the morning moving from one work group to another; taking photos to document the effort being made.

According to Nadel, the day’s acronym-laden rehabilitation effort began on Sept. 17, 2016, when he and a small group of residents of the neighboring 1 Rosa St. and River Place got together with him to pull some weeds from the lot and have a little picnic. He mentioned a concept that he returned to several times as he talked: the idea of resident involvement as the spark.

“I think the idea is that we activated the space. We got DCR’s attention.”

As he speaks, a DCR bulldozer rolls by, shovel up, moving brush. It’s a far different scene than the wedding picnic from almost exactly a year earlier. In explaining how DCR got there, Nadel spoke of the Fairmount Greenway Task Force that coordinates efforts to increase and maintain green space along the Fairmount Line. He also noted how the playground – right along the river bank – fit in as a piece of the ambitious Neponset Greenway plan. But he circled back to local resident involvement.

“There are local residents showing interest and, you know, it puts a little flame under the butt.”

If the day had been nicer, graphic designer Lawrence Wyche would have been hanging out by the blank green wall that borders part of the playground side closest to Mattapan, sketching out suggestions for wall mural designs. Since it’s raining, that idea has been scratched, but he was still hanging out by the wall wrestling with a hand saw as he tried to section off a felled tree.

Wyche is a longtime local resident and member of POHWER. He estimates that the playground has been closed for about 15 to 20 years, based on his own recollections of playing in it as a 12-year-old.

“It was an actual playground.” He describes the equipment and where it was: a big, wooden structure with a big metal slide and some smaller ones, a tire swing, seesaws, “and a jungle gym... Right over the asphalt.” Wyche chuckles at that before going on. “To remember playing here with my brothers and my friends, to seeing it just turned to nothing... to seeing people dump their trash... to a couple of weeks ago seeing DCR start the process of clearing the asphalt... It’s all really exciting to be a part of.”

The job, which was supposed to go until 3 p.m. wraps up at 12:30 p.m. but there’s a noticeable difference from just the work began at 10 a.m. The brush has largely been cleared away and the playground will be ready to be seeded and loamed sometime in the next couple of weeks.

A soggy Joe Smith trudged through the mud. As a kid in the 1950s, he’d come to the neighborhood to visit his grandmother.

“We didn’t want to hang around, so all the cousins came down here and we played for most of the day.”

As he remembered it, the park went down close to the river, where it was fenced in. “We used to walk right down to the river... and there used to be more swings down there and that’s where we used to play, because this was kind of hard topped... I can’t remember.”

The rain is slowing as Smith looks out at the muddy lot from under the shelter of a tent. “This was a nice oasis for us, and we enjoyed playing here, so it’s good to see it coming back.”

The tentative plan – according to Nadel – is for visioning sessions to occur over the winter and for Phase 2 to start up at the beginning of next summer. To check for updates, contact www.swbcdc.org.

Making Strides against Breast Cancer celebrates 25 years of giving Tens of thousands of residents, supporters and cancer survivors came out on Sunday for the 25th annual Making Strides Against Breast Cancer fundraiser.

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The 25th annual Making Strides Against Breast Cancer Walk/Run slammed the Hatch Memorial Shell Sunday morning as tens of thousands of participants flooded the area.

Pink shirts could be seen as far away as the Boston Common as the event strolled through the neighborhoods. The event was part of a national effort from the American Cancer Society (ACS) to raise funds and support for cancer research and patient support.

Michelle Shlahger, her husband Bruce and several of their children came out to the event to show support for survivors and the cause. Michelle Shlahger said she herself is a 22-year survivor, and has been coming out as much as she can in that time to support Making Strides.

"We've been coming here for 20 years," she said. "It feels great to see the love and support here."

Bruce Shlahger added that getting the family out to Strides is never a problem.

"We just ask, it's very easy, we just say we're going," he said. "These are all repeat walkers, too. We all really enjoy it."

Norwood resident Robin DiFlaminies, who started the local group Robin's Breast Friends, said she's been helping the ACS raise funds for research since 2010. Since that time, her team of more than 30 members has raised $5,000 for research. She's participated in several events over the past few months, including an event in Walpole.

"It's a lot of stuff going on here," she said. "This is my third event in two months, and I'm flying to Florida next week for another event. My dear friend is also a breast cancer survivor and she came up last year and did this walk with me so I told her I'm going down next year to walk with you. Little did I realize I was going to have all these other events cropping up, like Norwood Day, today's Strides, Walpole, so it's been kind of crazy."

DiFlaminies said it's going to be refreshing to participate in an event she did not have to organize herself.

"I'm looking forward to going to Florida, because I don't have to plan anything, it's just going to four days in the sun walking with my girls and representing Robin's Breast Friends and Boston," she said.

DiFlaminies was originally diagnosed with breast cancer in 2008, and underwent surgery to have the mass removed. Later, her doctor called her and said she had Stage 1 Invasive Ductal Carcinoma.

"I underwent numerous tests and surgeries before I found out I had breast cancer," she said. "All I heard was 'you have breast cancer,' it didn't matter what kind. The following months were filled with more surgeries, countless tests, chemotherapy and radiation treatment."

DiFlaminies said it was only with the support of those around her that she was able to make it through.

"As scared as I was by this diagnosis, I could not have gotten through this difficult time without the love and support of my friends and family," she said. "I couldn't let them see how terrified I was, I was a single mother at the time and had to stay strong for my two boys."

It was in 2010 when she was told she was in remission, she said she decided to do something to help those facing what she faced and formed Robin's Breast Friends.

"This is my chance to give back and help others less fortunate than I," she said.

DiFlaminies went on to say that in 2012, her oncologist said that in 2008, she had actually had another type of breast cancer that was treated that they did not see initially called Triple Negative Breast Cancer. The process of treatment after that was extensive, but even though initial test came back with negative results, DiFlaminies said she elected to take further action.

"It was at this point my doctor me I fit the criteria for the BRCA1 gene, and I agreed to do the test because I didn't think it was going to come back positive," she said. "There's no history of breast cancer in my family. The results came back, and I was stunned to learn that I had tested positive. This diagnosis led me to the decision

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO PEACE AND JOY?

We initially resisted using this space to discuss the evil, horrific mass slayings in Las Vegas.

Inside baseball: routine writing about a tragedy of that sort is easy. Recount the events, express a carefully balanced recipe of sympathy and anger, and top off with a healthy dollop of “thoughts” and “prayers.”

As formulaic as that sounds, the exercise isn’t necessarily banal or uncaring. The sad reality is that events of this sort have become so routine and common that patterns have emerged.

The aftermath of recent events, as easily predicted, is a political debate. In one corner, anti-gun forces with unrealistic expectations of how legislation might stop events like this from happening. The other side, just as stubborn and foolish, will defend any, and all, personal weaponry as vital to their vision of the American way of life. It is telling that NRA-fed Congressmen had to yank a bill legalizing gun silencers at the last minute, lest the optics do more harm than good.

This space, today, isn’t about the Second Amendment. Feel free to continue the terrible dance that strikes up the band after every spree killing on your own time. What distresses up is a far more fundamental question: “Why?”

Terrorism, foreign or domestic, is easy to figure out. There are agendas, philosophies, religious fervor, and blind allegiance to dissect. Evil permeates the agenda, but there is at least some sliver of comprehension to be extracted and inform the battle. An act like this, as random as it is premeditated, is beyond any simplistic analysis. What happened in Vegas is too methodical to excuse as mere insanity, yet too insane to ascribe to religion or politics. Terrorists, although not always in time, can tip their hand. How can a crisis be averted when perpetrated by an otherwise indistinct American holed up in a hotel in a city that prides itself on anonymity?

What is it about our society where such brutality is becoming so common? What can we do when, in addition to grand scale acts of violence, there are the daily terrors of random crime? Every day young men are killing each other in inner cities. Every hour, someone dies by knowingly pumping their blood full of deadly drugs.

Console yourselves if you must with the busy, repetitive work of defending and attacking firearm laws. Offer all the thoughts, prayers, condolences and Facebook offerings of “white light” that make you feel better. None of it matters. The nihilistic reality is that records will be broken. More men, women, and children will die in ever-increasing numbers because someone read a holy book a certain way, or had deadly delusions of grandeur. The thing we pray will never happen again will, indeed, happen again until the incomprehensible cycle is broken.

Everything these days seems predicated on anger. Politics. Neighborhood squabbles. Bullying. Police relations. Even sporting events inspire outrage, sometimes before the game even starts. Something must give. “Let there be peace on earth,” a popular church song urges. More importantly, is the refrain: “And let it begin with me.”

How Boston is helping the people of Puerto Rico

Our thoughts and prayers continue to be with the people of Puerto Rico, those who live here and those who are on the island, as they recover from the devastating impacts of Hurricane Maria. I am incredibly proud to share that we are stepping up as a City to support them in their time of need. Together with The Boston Foundation, we have established the Massachusetts United for Puerto Rico fund, a fund that is dedicated to the relief and reconstruction of Puerto Rico and will support any Puerto Rican person arriving in Boston and the Commonwealth who have been impacted by Hurricane Maria. I encourage residents to visit <https://tbf.org/puertorico> to learn more about the fund.

Together we are sharing the important message to the people of Puerto Rico that we are here to help, for as long as they need. In Boston, we have a strong Puerto Rican community made up of over 32,000 residents. These residents, together with our greater Latino population, make up nearly 20 percent of our City.

In Boston, we know that our strength lies in our diversity. We take pride in being a City made up of people from all different backgrounds, representing many ethnicities and cultural heritages. Diversity shapes our neighborhoods and our identity as a City.

That’s why this month across Boston, and across the United States, we are celebrating Hispanic Heritage Month, honoring the important contributions that members of the Hispanic community that have helped shaped Boston to be the city it is today, having influenced every sector of Boston life, from our culture, to our industries, to our economy. Hispanic heritage is an important presence in our civic life, and is an ever-growing part of Boston’s strength - today and in the future.

We’re doing everything we can to support the needs of the Hispanic community, and all the communities that make Boston such a thriving city. That’s why we’re working together to make sure that every decision we make, we make together. From early education to senior services, we will continue to build a Boston for all.

We will continue to empower the Hispanic community, as well as the strong diversity within the Hispanic community. In this time of national division, cities need to step up as leaders. That’s exactly what we’re doing in Boston. We stand for all our people. We stand for the diversity that makes our City great, because Boston is a city for everyone.

And we will reach beyond our borders to show the same level of support and compassion for the people of Boston with those in need in other parts of the country. We will lift the people of Puerto Rico up through this hard time, and will support them every step of the way. The people of Puerto Rico will always have a friend in Boston.

Please visit boston.gov/relief-efforts for more information about Boston’s efforts to support Puerto Rico, or visit <https://tbf.org/puertorico> to donate.

Italians don't get no respect

This upcoming week, always at the beginning of October, is the usual time for bashing Italians.

But don’t bash the title of this piece because I already realize there’s a purposeful grammatical mistake in the title: the somewhat insidious double negative.

Very few will argue that Christopher Columbus was the first one to land in the New World. Maybe these few are the type who argues against global warming.

Archeologists make the sound case that the Vikings and perhaps St. Brendan were the first Europeans to land here. Some, and I say some, anti-Italians delight in veritably trumpeting this not-so-new revelation.

And then there is the case that Columbus brought all sorts of trouble to the Americas - disease, racism, murder, etc. This is not doubted, but who is to say that other European explorers would not have done the same?

My Kind of Town/ Joe Galeota

Of course, if Columbus had not “discovered” America and opened up the trade routes (and assuming nobody else did), all of us with European ancestry would not be in the United States; we would be squeezed into Europe and everybody with Asian ancestry would be on the other side of the Pacific.

The good news is that there would have been no slaves imported from Africa. Some 12.5 million were shipped to the New World but, according to Harvard Professor Henry Gates, only 388,000 did arrive in the United States, the rest to the Caribbean and South America.

Italian-Americans have made their way to the Capi-in part is to also help establish new traditions, community engagement and to essentially celebrate rich history.

"We want to engage all of Hyde Park, because this is something to celebrate," Smith said.

After the participants broke off into their groups to build on what they would like to see for the celebrations, Smith and Consalvo brought everyone back as a whole and went over some of the suggestions.

One group suggested pony rides, trolley tours, local school projects, school contests, arts & crafts, and face painting for the children's category. For family, some proposed having fireworks, a flash mob from one of Hyde Parks dance studios, concerts and bands, a dance and an awareness campaign for special needs. The group working on the seniors category said that having a concert, senior story day or an outdoor oldies dance party would be a great idea, too.

Smith asserted that there was more planning and brainstorming needed in order to make this venture successful.

"This is just the early stages of the celebration, much work is yet to be done," he said.

The next steps, following this session, as explained by Smith is to volunteer, consolidate ideas and start building calendar events.

"Our plan it to launch the celebrations at the November Tree Lighting ceremony," Smith said.

Idea boxes have been placed around the community for suggestions and ideas for the celebration, for those who were unable to make the session.

For Favors or Prayers Answered

Prayer to the Blessed Virgin
(Never known to fail!)

Oh, most beautiful flower of Mt. Carmel, fruitful vine, splendor of Heaven, Blessed Mother of the Son of God, Immaculate Virgin, assist me in this necessity. Oh Star of the Sea, help me and show me herein you are my mother. Oh Holy Mary, Mother of God, Queen of Heaven and Earth, I humbly beseech thee from the bottom of my heart to succor me in my necessity (make request). There are none that can withstand your power. Oh Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee (three times). Holy Mary, I place this cause in your hands (three times). Say this prayer for three consecutive days and then you must publish and it will be granted to you. Grateful thanks. —K.B.

St. Jude's Novena

May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be adored, glorified, loved and preserved throughout the world, now and forever. Sacred Heart of Jesus pray for us. St. Jude, worker of miracles, pray for us. St. Jude, helper of the hopeless, pray for us. Say this prayer 9 times a day. By the 9th day your prayer will be answered. It has never been known to fail. Publication must be promised. Thank you St. Jude. My Prayers were answered.
In gratitude for helping me. —J.H.

Miracle Prayer

Dear Heart of Jesus, in the past I have asked You for many favours. This time, I ask you this very special one (mention favour). Take it, dear Heart of Jesus, and place it within Your own broken heart where Your Father sees it. Then, in His merciful eyes, it will become Your favour, not mine. Amen. Say for three days, promise publication and favour will be granted.

—D.J.

BPD Drug Control Unit makes presentation at Pierce watch meeting, cleanup details released

Mary Ellen Gambon
Staff Reporter

More than a dozen concerned residents and law enforcement officials attended Tuesday night's meeting of the Pierce Street Neighborhood Watch group.

Drug Control Unit Officer Linda Stanford introduced a new officer, who will be working undercover in Hyde Park. For reasons of confidentiality, his name cannot be released.

This special citywide unit, based in Charlestown, consists of four officers, two detectives and a sergeant detective, according to Stanford. Its focus is strictly on overdoses. It sprung up in response to the rise in fentanyl overdoses over the past year.

"My duties and mission were always about trying to save lives," said Stanford. "This unit is the flip side. I've been a member of the Drug Control Unit for seven years, and I have been with this unit since April. I'll be transitioning into an educational role while (the undercover officer) is in the community."

The overdose response unit not only investigates the death of an overdose victim, but also researches the neighborhood to learn about potential drug distribution sources and find friends and family of the diseased who may need resources.

"We come in. We get the reports, and then we get the information from the neighborhood to get the answers," Stanford said.

"We are connected with an organization called PAATHS (Providing Access to Addiction Treatment Hope & Support)," she noted. "We find that people who know the victim are often in need of treatment. And addiction is a disease."

PAATHS provides information about and access to treatment for addiction and auxiliary support services and referrals. It also connects clients to detox programs, outpatient treatment and prevention programs.

Stanford also works with people who may not be capable of making the decision to seek treatment.

"Sometimes we will go to a person's house and ask if they feel safe and comfortable speaking with us," she said. "We go in plain clothes. Once we begin talking and assess the situation, we discuss the options for help. We always treat the person with respect, because everyone deserves respect."

"If the person can't make a conscious choice about getting help, we work with Judge Kathleen Coffey at West Roxbury District Court to get a Section 35. This is a civil commitment."

At that point, a person can be sent to a treatment facility without his or her consent.

The unit also reaches out to Massachusetts General Hospital, Tufts Medical Center, Boston Medical Center and Faulkner Hospital.

"In addition, since some overdose victims are from communities including Norwood and Shrewsbury, we reach out to other police departments to let them know about what we have found."

In other neighborhood news, residents spoke of the recent successful Neponset River Cleanup. There were more than 200 volunteers who removed 9.5 tons of garbage from the river, including 80 rubber tires and many shopping carts.

Hyde Park activist and group member Barbara Baxter mentioned that she captured a priceless picture from the cleanup on her cell phone.

"A young man was pulling a shopping cart out of the water," she said. "It looked like there was a license plate on the front. When he went to clean it off, he saw his father's face! It was like a ghost coming back from the grave. But the man is still alive.

"What happened was that, back in the 90s, businesses used to advertise on the front of shopping carts," she continued. "The picture was of his father, a local chiropractor, Dr. Jordan Arbit."

While that was a positive experience, Lisa Consalvo from Rep. Angelo Scaccia's office lamented that, while volunteers from the New England Aquarium and local colleges including Wentworth Institute of Technology participated in the cleanup, only 10 percent of the volunteers were Hyde Park residents.

"We should have more people from Hyde Park involved," she said.

She added that Hyde Park is beginning preparations for its 150th anniversary. Ideas are being taken in suggestion boxes at Blue Hills Bank and Cappy's Pizza on Truman Parkway. Possibilities include an international food festival, fireworks, a cemetery tour and other historical events.

Karen Rickets, a servant at the Family Life Fellowship Foursquare Church, announced that there will be a meeting Thursday morning at 10 a.m. at the church to plan an interfaith Thanksgiving Celebration. A collection will be taken on Thanksgiving of nonperishable food and money to donate to the Hyde Park Food Pantry.

bition worked for this show. The entry period lasted for about a month, during which time artists could enter up to three pieces of their work. By the end of this period, over 100 works of art falling into the portrait category had been entered.

The exhibition was juried by Sally B. Moore, who was brought in by the MAC. Typically, juried exhibitions have one judge, sometimes two. National shows might have three. In the case of this exhibition, Moore worked blindly; she had only the work and its title – and submitted .jpg files, rather than the actual pieces – to judge by. She was given four days to review and make her choices. Of the more than 100 pieces entered, 57 were chosen.

Many entries fell well within the traditional parameters of visual portraiture, while others seem to blend into other categories. Still others don't seem to fit at all. As Lucas explained, Moore wanted to expand the parameters of what a portrait is: from something beyond what you see to what you feel.

Lucas focuses on a striking photo of a man curled up in the fetal position in a bathtub (Mark "Red" Wylie's "Safe Space.") His face is covered; by traditional portrait guidelines, its key element is obscured. Lucas, however, viewing it in a broader sense, saw it very much as a portrait.

"It reflects an emotion," Lucas said. "The essence of being... Beyond the literal, it a portrait can express essence, memory, or personality."

One of the exhibiting artists, Robin Radin, joins the conversation. A photographer with three pieces on display, she took this idea a little further, using the example of a hypothetical subject's bedroom.

"If you compose that in a certain way, that could be a portrait of the person, minus their physical presence, but having something about the essence of who they are," Radin said.

On the opposite side of the room, we're at face level with one of her photographs: a naturally lit, black and white photo of an old woman sitting in an easy chair, the sunlight projecting the frame of the unseen window next to her onto the wall behind her. Her hand is to her chin, pensive. Her headscarf looks Muslim. The title card below the photo brings that conclusion home: "Before the Fast."

Radin described her general method of working.

"I tend to use as much time talking to people as I do actually taking the photographs because I feel like that is how I'm going to get them more intimate," she said.

As Radin remembered it, she made about 40 exposures of Fareena – using a tripod and cable – over the afternoon they spent together in her apartment on the day before Ramadan many years ago.

They had met at an old style pharmacy in Jamaica Plain that had its regulars who would go in to get their lunch and hang out at the soda fountain. Becoming a regular there herself, Radin got to know a lot of them as she was taking their photographs, and soon became more curious.

"I became interested in knowing what their life was like outside of that public space, and I'd ask people if I could come and photograph them at home," she said.

The chair by the unseen window overlooking South Huntington Avenue was a comfortable spot for Fareena, another important ingredient in Radin's work.

"People can relax and be themselves in a space that they identify with," Fareena said.

In one of the smaller rooms, Radin is relating the circumstances of her high contrast portrait of a black musician playing the accordion by Jamaica Pond ("Slow Boat") when the sound of organized gathering floats in from the main room. Prizes are being awarded: Juror's Choice ($100), three Honorary Mentions (free MAC membership), and the Director's Choice ($75).

She walks in just in time to hear her name called to receive an Honorary Mention for "Before the Fast" right before Mark "Red" Wylie receives his for "Safe Space."

The Director's Choice goes to a sculpture of a ballerina balanced on a warped bicycle tire, the creation of West Roxbury's Silvina Mizrahi titled "Soul's Breeze." Another one of her entries – following the same theme – is displayed close by.

Having trained as a ballerina herself, elements of her experience come through in these two pieces.

"I think that the idea of movement and dance, and the personality of each ballerina came in some ways on the sculptures," she said.

Using the ancient lost wax technique, Mizrahi sculpts in beeswax, after which a mould is made around her creation and hot bronze is poured in, thus "losing" the melted wax and producing the final prod-

Silvina Mizrahi poses next to her sculpture "Soul's Breeze" shortly after winning the Director's Choice award at the MAC Portraits exhibition. The exhibition will go until Oct. 19.

"It's magical to bring a piece to a place (a foundry) in wax, and then go and pick it up and the piece is in bronze," Mizrahi said.

She didn't submit her entries until the last day; she wasn't convinced that they qualified as portraits. Winning a prize was a very happy surprise for her, obvious from her beaming expression as she is photographed next to "Soul's Breeze."

"You know, it's nice for the soul, because sometimes you are doing this job and it's, like, 'Should I keep it?'" she said.

For Mizrahi – and for many of the other artists here – there's really only one answer to that question.

Portraits will be at the Menino Arts Center until Oct. 19.

OVERCOMING ARTHRITIS LIMITATIONS

Nearly half of individuals aged 65 years and older have physician-diagnosed arthritis. While this inflammatory condition can be managed with pain medication, there is also evidence that regular activity can help older adults with arthritis stay independent. How much activity is necessary, you may ask? Even though federal guidelines recommend 150 minutes of moderate exercise per week, few older adults with arthritis can meet this standard. Fortunately, researchers have found that osteoarthritis sufferers between the ages of 49 and 83 who engaged in only 45 minutes of moderate activity per week were 80 percent more likely to improve their walking speed and ability to perform light activities. This is encouraging news for arthritic seniors who want to stay mobile.

The goals of arthritis treatment are to reduce joint pain and inflammation, while improving and maintaining joint function. Staying vital and living well are achievable goals at DEUTSCHES ALTENHEIM. Please call to schedule a consultation and tour of our senior community at 2222 Centre Street, West Roxbury by contacting us today. Ask about our Schrafft Pavilion for Alzheimer/Dementia Care and Edelweiss Village.

P.S. Physical activity and exercise help combat arthritis by strengthening the muscles that surround the joints and relieving pressure on bone and cartilage.

Ask The Doctor

Junior Damato began servicing vehicles in 1969. He owns a 10-bay auto repair service center in Hyde Park and an 8-bay center in Middleboro. Junior is an ASE-certified Master Technician, ASE-certified L-1 and ASE-certified Natural Gas.

Two Very Different Trucks

You want a truck to drive daily? To tow a car or boat? To go off-roading with? Here are two very different pickups: a Dodge 2500 Power Wagon and a Ford Raptor. Both have four doors, automatic transmissions, A/C, leather interiors, big tires and wheels, very heavy-duty suspensions, and both sit high off the ground. The Dodge is powered by a large, 6.4 liter Hemi and power goes through a 6-speed transmission. The Ford has a twin turbo, high-performance V/6 engine via a 10-speed automatic.

The Power Wagon is and feels like a heavy-duty pickup; the Raptor is and feels lighter. The Power Wagon can tow heavier loads; both are equipped with a 4.10 axle ratio. The Power Wagon is equipped with a factory installed Warn 12,000 pound tow winch. Both have unique bagging and wheels with tires designed for each truck. The Power Wagon has a heated steering wheel, ventilated and heated 10-way power driver's and 6-way power passenger's front seats. Both have a 115-volt outlet, high power audio systems, and large center touchscreens. Skid plates are also part of the under body and mechanical protection on both trucks. LED lighting is on both as well as remote engine startup systems.

The Raptor seems to ride smoother and handles better on both smooth and rough roads. Driving down winding roads, the Raptor does not sway or slide over broken pavement. The Raptor also has multiple driving modes controlled from the steering wheel, including a sport mode that reconfigures everything about the truck including steering feel, transmission shift points and firmness. EPA rating on the Raptor is 15 city, 18 highway MPG, EPA on the Power Wagon is not required because of its heavy-duty status, however, the mileage is similar. Base MSRP on the Raptor is $48,325 (destination fee: $1,195); optional equipment is $14,300. The Power Wagon's base is $51,695 (destination fee: $1,320); optional equipment is $11,400.

The bottom line is that both trucks have all the creature comforts for all seasons and all types of driving. If you need a heavy-duty pickup for a lot of heavy-duty pulling, the Power Wagon is for you. If you want a lighter duty, fun to drive pickup that will tow the majority of items most people have (horse trailers, snow mobiles, etc.) then the Raptor is your choice.

Making Strides

to have a bilateral mastectomy as a preventative measure. By the end of October 2013, I had the bilateral mastectomy, and I was told after surgery that they did not find any cancer. I knew I had made the right decision. One week later I received a phone call from the doctor's office with the pathology report. They had found a tumor in my right breast."

She said she underwent chemo again for an entire year, but she said she came out on top and that this past August, her oncologist office called to tell her she would not have to come in again for the foreseeable future. DiFlaminies said she has won against cancer herself twice, but has had to fight it for the benefit of her son Chuck in 1998 as well. She said her victories and those of her family and others are proof of her convictions.

"Chuck turned 31 last week, and has been cancer-free for 20 years. I thank my friends, family members and God for standing beside me and helping me along the way with this difficult journey," she said. "Without them, I would never have been able to face this disease three times or beat it on my own, there was no way it was going to happen... Never, ever give up the fight."

Executive Director for the Eastern New England Cancer Society Holly Grant was one of the main organizers of the event, and she said this year's participation was amazing.

"We had a great turnout, we've had a beautiful day and some really passionate supporters," she said. "We've got a lot of people who started with us 25 years ago who are still walking with us. It's just incredibly powerful, it's one of my favorite days of the year, truly. I got involved with the ACS because of breast cancer in my family, a lot of us have been diagnosed, and this is just such a celebration of so many people who survived the disease and we celebrate them and we remember those who have been lost as well.

"The money that's been raised today provides critical support our cancer research program, we have $11 million currently invested right now for breast cancer research here in Massachusetts, we have $62 million nationwide, and the funds also support our patients services programs."

Debbie Morrison came out with her daughters and friends Elsie Lisle and Renee Palmer from Dorchester for the 13th year this year, and Morrison said it's been a great time. Morrison herself has been in remission for that time.

The increased connectivity is also aimed at helping municipal buildings and school buildings. According to the city, the increased amount of fiber-optics will go to the city to schools, support the delivery of City services, and enhance public safety communications systems. The Boston Fiber Optic Network (BoNET) was originally set up in 2008 to connect 130 city office through 10 hubs. Since then, the city has used the network to connect more than 50 more buildings and Wi-Fi hotspots since then.

The new fiber-optic infrastructure from Verizon is purported to add to the 26 schools and 38 libraries already included in the BoNET.

"This agreement brings increased competition and choice for broadband and entertainment services in Boston," said Chief of Information and Technology, Jascha Franklin-Hodge. "Providing more constituents with internet options will help lower costs and make internet access affordable to more families and businesses."

Verizon itself stated that it has through this expansion increased the digital offerings for the city.

"Since we introduced FiOS in Boston late last year we've almost doubled available data speed, and now offer our Fios Gigabit Connection service. Our teams are outside everyday transforming Boston's technology foundation," said New England Region President, Donna Cupelo.

Roslindale Village Main Streets Executive Director Alia Hamada Forrest said if it can help local businesses compete, the added connectivity will be welcomed.

"Having a dependable internet connection during the holiday shopping season is extremely important for businesses in Roslindale," she said. "I've heard stories of the the internet being down during December, and if Fios can help make that never happen again — then yes, it'd be a major help."

ing to be using that for is... for pipe, good clean fill to put back in the hole, and whatever other items they need to do a street project, but not for contaminated dirt," Garibaldi said. "It will not be trucked in or stored there, according to this letter."

There were a number of questions from the group about this, particularly about the fact that the National Grid yard will be a 24-hour operation, which elicited some murmuring from the group.

When Lisa Consalvo, who is concerned at this development, brought up that she would like to clarify exactly what would be going in and out of the site during these hours, Garibaldi responded.

"That would probably go through Councilor McCarthy's office, because this letter was directed toward your office," he said.

Additionally, the letter in question also stated that dug up asphalt will be stored in the National Grid yard, leading Garibaldi to send another question McCarthy's way via Steve Maguire, again regarding contamination.

Maguire, in response to Readville Yard 5's change in plans and to the number of questions requiring further research, responded broadly.

"This is a significant change, so we will take it slowly and make sure that everything is done correctly, and make sure the neighborhood is for it, as well," Maguire said. "We will make sure that we address all of the issues covered tonight, and notify you guys, as well."

Speaking further on the topic, which first came up in 2014, Garibaldi considered its changes over time.

"In 2014, this was a low impact situation," he said. "Now we have two other major projects they're going to put in there: the Sprague Street development by the bridge and the Father Hart development, so... now we have to look at it again differently... but it might not be as serious as everybody thinks it is."

Later on, Garibaldi did share his opinion on First Highland's plans to sync the traffic lights in Wolcott Square with the proposed traffic lights at the Father Hart Bridge.

"All that does is create a gridlock situation, because people will be blowing through the red lights," Garibaldi said.

In additional business, Ann Cushing, representing State Sen. Mike Rush, made the general announcement that the commuter rail would be installing fiber optic cables to the tracks during weekends. A commuter rail representative is being scheduled to make a more detailed presentation regarding this work at the next meeting.

In new business, there have been increasing complaints regarding increased air traffic flying over the neighborhood. Maguire announced that Councilor McCarthy has been working to solve this problem and is scheduled to meet with the Massachusetts delegation in Washington, D.C. to speak about the issue.

"He is diligently working on this because he knows it's a big issue, not only for Readville, but for all of District 5," Maguire said.

There were also complaints for the police regarding scooters and quads speeding up and down West Milton and Chesterfield streets.

In a sign that fall is here, according a vandalism incident in the police report, $120 worth of pumpkins were destroyed in a dispute between two tenants over a parking spot.

The next Readville Neighborhood Watch meeting will be on Thursday, Oct. 20.

tol but not to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. One recently made it to the West Wing for a week or so, Anthony Scaramucci.

A writer for the Globe, Joan Vennoch, made the point after the Scaramucci debacle several months ago that political correctness would have inhibited comics and news writers from poking fun of him and his nationality if he were of another heritage. She might be correct.

This is not to say that many of us Italians (I'm half Irish, with four grandparents from Kerry and Calabria) do not laugh just as heartily at Godfather impersonations or speech patterns mimicking Italians attempting to master English.

It's too bad that Scaramucci was given the bum's rush - but deservedly so - from the West Wing. Very, very few Italians (are there any others?) have ever received mail there.

Perhaps someday there will be an Italian in the West Wing as a mover/shaker for some president, higher than Minority Leader of the House Nancy Pelosi, or even in the oval office itself.

But until that time we Italians and even those of us who are part Italian take some pride in recalling the local political accomplishments of Menino, Cellucci, and Volpe.

Before I worked at Northeastern, I had a job as a medical assistant in Brighton. I left because I was paid differently and treated differently as a Puerto Rican woman because my English wasn't as good as my co-workers. I now work at Northeastern full-time, but I still live in low-income housing. I am on the Mass Health Connector. I pay for insurance that provides me with less coverage than I need because I cannot afford anything more than that.

I am sharing my story, but my story echoes the lives of many food service workers on campus that cannot live on a Northeastern salary. Hundreds of food service workers who feed Northeastern's students need public assistance like low-income housing, Mass Health and food stamps to get by.

Last year, Harvard food service workers fought and won big. They have helped inspire us at Northeastern to fight for more. We know our work and our lives have value. We are asking for a guaranteed salary of $35,000 a year for full-time work, the median income in Boston. We put genuine care into the food we make and the service we provide. I'm proud to work at Northeastern and I thank all the students and professors who have stood by us. But, there is no pride in an institution with millions keeping its workers stuck on public assistance and trapped in poverty. My mother raised my three sisters and me by herself. She is now disabled and I help her with the bills whenever I can. I want to buy a house for her. I want to give her a more stable life in our own place. I see Boston as my home. I don't want to start from zero somewhere else.

We hope the city of Boston will support us this fall as we ask Northeastern to change Boston for the better. Our work and our lives matter to the Northeastern community and the city at large, and we are prepared to prove it.
