The Massachusetts Water Resource Authority (MWRA) is wrapping up work on what it calls MWRA Water Project 6454.

The project has been on the books since 2014, and started initial construction in 2016. The project was designed as a redundant pipe for residents of West Roxbury, Hyde Park, Dedham, Stoughton, Westwood and Norwood.

MWRA Community Coordinator Jeff McLaughlin said they are in the process of the final paving of the Enneking and West Roxbury Parkway. He said the pipes are all in, and the gravel below the pavement should be totally settled, making for a

New Era begins as Corey the Barber takes over

Matt MacDonald

When Joe Carlevale retired last month after 61 years as a barber, it marked the end of a one man neighborhood era. However, as the door swung closed on his career at the Logan Square Barber Shop, it swung back open for a Hyde Park native returning home.

Corey McElligott – raised on Fairmount Hill – has been behind the barber chair at the Shop for exactly as long as Carlevale has been retired and, during an afternoon lull about a week into his tenure, took some time to chat about his experience so far, and his plans.

“It’s been going good. I think for the longest time it’s been an old school barber shop, so I have to bring in the young flair and the modernized haircuts, and stuff like that. But it’s been pretty good.”

McElligott – tattooed and built like a heavyweight prizefighter – is sitting near the cash register with his back to the window and the Munie, visible through the glass.

He’s been barbering for the last five years. Before that, he had been a roofer for 15, and described how his career change came about.

This past Saturday and Sunday, June 2 and 3, Keep Hyde Park Beautiful (KHPB) – working together with Hyde Park Main Streets – planted flowers throughout the Logan Square and Cleary Square business district.

This project was the latest for KHPB, which was established almost exactly a year ago as an anti-litter/pro-neighborhood beautification group. KHPB founder Cathy Horn – standing with the small group of volunteers who had assembled under the Clock in Logan Square before spreading out – described the project.

KHPB volunteers would be repopulating the large Hyde Park Main Streets sidewalk planters with flowers. These planters run from the firehouse on Fairmount Avenue out to the YMCA on River Street and down to Hyde Park Avenue at Cleary Square.

The planters – which were the subject of last year’s KHPB “Adopt-a-Planter” campaign – will again be up for adoption now that this year’s planting has been completed.

“We’ll try to get everybody who adopted last year to re-up for this year, and then whatever we can’t get from last year, we’ll just try to find new people,” Horn said.

She went on to explain what responsibilities the adoptions – which run one year – entail.

“We’re just looking for people to commit to taking

During the most recent Fairmount Hill Neighborhood Association (FHNA) meeting, an update was delivered pertaining to where the community is progressively in terms of its “marijuana establishment,” along with some general information about how the “Marijuana Establishment” process works.

Speaking on behalf of just the local side of this matter, Hyde Park Liaison Bryan Flynn conducted a brief presentation on it.

Handicapped placards compound issues for parking fine increases

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Boston City Council met last Friday to discuss proposed increases to 11 parking fines as presented by Boston Mayor Marty Walsh.

The new increases are relevant to resident permit parking from $40 to $60, no parking zones (Zone A area will be increased from $55 to $90 and Zone B areas will be increased from $25 to $55), double parking (Zone A increased from $45 to $75 and Zone B increased from $30 to $55), no stopping or standing from $75 to $90, loading zones from $55 to $90, unpaid meter from $25 to $40, over meter time limit from $25 to $40, over posted time limited from $25 to $40, and parked in a street cleaning zone from $40 to $90.

Chief of Streets Chris Osgood said the reasoning behind the increases is that his office has been hearing from residents around the city regarding illegal parking and a lack of enforcement in that area.

"Over the last four years, we've seen a very significant change to the number of constituent requests through 311," he said. "In 2014, we received 4,469 requests from constituents through 311 for parking enforcement issues, so four years ago, it was 4,469; last year, that number had escalated to 36,421."

Osgood said that one of the main issues they saw keep popping up was that non-residents are parking neighborhood resident parking areas, and those with stickers have been reaching out extensively through 311, which is why they want to increase the fines.

"What we looked at when we looked at that significant escalation, that fell into a set of buckets that we really want to address, there were a lot of concerns from residents who are coming home at night and finding people without resident parking stickers on their neighborhood and wanted an easier way to be able to make sure that when they got home to their neighborhood in their car there was a space that would be available for them," he said. "The second large category of constituent concerns that was raised was really in our business districts and around meters."

Osgood said the other big problem they see within the city is that parking in the business districts has been choked by those overstaying their welcome at or not paying for their metered spots. He said, again, a way to combat that and increase traffic to the businesses is to increase the fines.

"The new fines are part of a $5 million transportation investment around Go Boston 2030 and, if enacted, would be included in the city's operating budget for the fiscal year 2019. The funds would go towards capital projects, 58 of them, outlined in Go Boston 2030. One of these projects would be focused on improving bus service in the city and improving streets and traffic signals. If approved, the new fine schedules will be enacted July 1, 2018.

City Councilor Michael Flaherty said he was concerned about the increase in fine schedules for metered spaces because of the potential for an increase in handicapped placard fraud. He said that if the metered fines are increased, scammers would be more inclined to go to their doctor to get a note for a condition they may not have and be able to park at any meter all the time and all day, for free. This is an issue he has been talking about for a long time, and has been trying to remove, in that there are now ways to pay for a meter – including a mobile app – that do not require one to stand up to feed the meter.

"I have severe reservations on the metered parking side until we address the handicapped parking fraud and abuse," he said. "This would cause us to lose additional

Hyde Park Library hosts the Chameleon Arts Ensemble

Matt MacDonald
Staff Reporter

On Saturday afternoon, June 2, the Hyde Park Branch of the Boston Public Library (35 Harvard Ave.) hosted the Chameleon Arts Ensemble of Boston for its annual visit.

The one hour family concert – held upstairs in Weld Hall – drew approximately 80 people who were split almost evenly between adults, who sat in chairs that filled more than half of the room, and their small children who either sat with them or crowded the floor area between the seats and the eight member outfit hosted by Hans Indigo Spencer.

The ten piece program – entitled “Songs in Brilliant Hues” – featured the performance of pieces that, aside from one by Beethoven, showcased the work of decidedly more recent classical composers, most of whom are still alive and writing.

The last selection of the show – “Color Wheel” – was, in fact, written by Spencer himself who – having handed out numbered chimes in different pitches to some of the kids – gave brief instructions and then guided them (using hand signals matching the chimes’ numbers) as they accompanied and became part of the performance.

“The main thing is to get kids involved in playing and listening to music of different kinds within the classical realm...” Spencer said afterwards.

In describing the inspiration for “Color Wheel” to the audience, Spencer had mentioned going to the Smithsonian as a teenager and looking at the solid-color works of Mark Rothko. In his program notes, he also cited as inspiration “Tibetan mandalas whose symmetry encapsulates the universe.” He continued with the goal of the family concert:

“...Give them a chance to hear music and make connections between the inspiration of visual arts and the inspiration to create music, and to give them a chance to participate as much as possible, both in the concert – through my composition that involves audience participation – and through this instrument petting zoo.”

As Spencer speaks, different pitched woodwind honks and stringed scratches and – about half the time – recognizable oboe, clarinet, bassoon, violin, viola, and cello sounds are his background accompaniment: the instrument petting zoo that he had just referred to.

He’s standing in the courtyard located next to the children’s section of the library, where each member of the Chameleon has taken a spot, made themselves comfortable with a child-friendly version of their instrument (provided by Needham Music & Dance), and are making themselves available to any curious child who wants to give any of them a try.

Artistic Director Deborah Boldin is also in the courtyard, and explains the two-part show.

“The idea is that you give kids a chance – in a welcoming setting – to hear a variety of instruments, to hear a variety of types of music, and then to actually get their hands on the instruments that they’ve just heard and feel what it’s like to create sound.”

The Chameleon Ensemble – based out of the First Church in Boston (66 Marlborough St.) – has been in business since 1998 and, for most of its existence, has had a children’s educational aspect to its programming, which it also brings to the Boston Public Schools.

Everything happening around Boldin is the result of her experience as a student and her involvement – as a flutist – with children’s programs put on by the Baltimore Symphony, some of which involved instrument petting zoos in the lobby of Symphony Hall.

“So I went down there and I was helping the little kids trying to figure out where to put their fingers on the flute and that just really stuck with me. So – as a complement to hearing music – making music just Sally Merriman – bassoonist with the Chameleon Arts Ensemble – shares a smile with a fledgling player in the courtyard of the Hyde Park Library, where the instrument “petting-zoo” was held.

was a natural fit and came out of that experience.”

Originally putting on the family concert at Forsyth Chapel at Forest Hills Cemetery, and forced to find a new venue when the Chapel stopped holding public events, the Chameleon Ensemble found a new host when Boldin approached Hyde Park Branch Librarian Mary Margaret Pitts after hearing about the Summer Concerts in the Courtyard.

“They’ve been opening their doors to us ever since,” Boldin said of the relationship that she estimated has been going on for at least 10 years.

“The Library makes a per-Chameleon

HERE GOMES THE JUDGE

In our younger, smugger days, we were prone to dismiss out-of-hand many complaints against the legal system.

Folks, we rationalized, just don't understand how the court system works: that bail is not intended to be punitive; that sentences do have guidelines to follow; and we can't just throw away the key for perpetrators on certain crimes just because they made local headlines.

We still believe most of that. We do, however, find it very, very hard to defend some recent low-points from the world of "justice."

Let us add our irritation and fury over a case that has local politicians and the public fuming.

That case involves a Salem Superior Court judge who showed leniency to a heroin dealer brought before the bench. Judge Timothy Q. Feeley sentenced Manuel Soto-Vittini to two years' probation for possession with intent to distribute 15 grams of heroin.

"This was not a drug addict who was dealing to fund his own addiction, but rather, a person who made some terrible judgments and decisions, but made them for what he thought was in the best interest of his family," a transcript from the hearing says.

The judge, apparently, feared that the man would also be automatically deported.

So, let's get this straight. Setting aside discussions of how drug possession thresholds work in the legal world, this man was given leniency because he was allegedly trying to provide for his family. How many others behind bars, we ask, were also trying to raise kids (or at least pretending to do so for the sake of convenience and legal strategy). Crime is often a last resort for those trying to keep a family together, but the motivation cannot be treated so cavalierly. They may help their family, but at the COST to our families.

Motivation can indeed be an important factor in court trials, especially murder cases. The "family" card, however, has no business when attached to a drug dealer who was arrested in the midst of an opioid epidemic. How many other "family providers" might have died from an overdose through this dealer's illicit trade? Yes, we are being alarmist. But desperate times demand it.

A drug crisis should not be an excuse for mob justice. It should, however, be a warning to the courts that sentencing needs to take it into consideration. Arrested for marijuana possession, who cares? As many as 40 bags of heroin: go directly to jail and do not pass go.

Judicial leniency has always been a concern, one that is often political and either on-target or overstated. There is, however, a modicum of leadership judges must show as arbiters between those who are truly trying to raise families and those who found a convenient excuse.

We can certainly expect compassion in sentencing, but not for being caught dead to rights dealing heroin. No matter the amount, that and other crimes affecting entire communities deserves greater scrutiny.

Suffolk County Court to offer ePay for online payment of criminal fees

Suffolk County court users who owe criminal case fees can now skip the trip to their local courthouse and pay online with ePay, the Massachusetts Trial Court's new web-based payment system. Over 200,000 payments were made in person at Commonwealth courthouses each year will now be able to be made online with ePay.

ePay will be available for payment of fees in criminal cases in all eight divisions of the Boston Municipal Court Department and Suffolk Superior Court on May 14, 2018.

"People expect to be able to make court-related payments online-just like they can for most services," says Boston Municipal Court West Roxbury Division Clerk-Magistrate Sean P. Murphy. "ePay is much more convenient than having to pay fees in person, and doesn't require taking time off from work to get to the courthouse."

Court users can use ePay for payment of probation fees, victim witness fees, or most other criminal assessments at participating courthouses. Use of ePay via PayPal or credit cards involves a small convenience fee that goes to processing vendors.

In 2017, nearly three-quarter of the Trial Court's 298,000 criminal case payments were made at the counter by check or case. As use of ePay grows, court visitors can expect shorter lines to enter their local courthouses and at the counter.

ePay was recently piloted at six courts and will be rolled out statewide through June 2018.

SUPPORT ROXBURY PREP

To the Editor:

I am a longtime Roslindale resident, the parent of two BPS students (8th and 5th grades) and have been an active member of the community for more than a decade. I support the new Roxbury Prep High School in Roslindale at 361 Belgrade Ave. because I believe that the new school will be a much-needed asset to our neighborhood and broader community. Roslindale remains the only neighborhood in Boston without a public high school — and we are in desperate need of new high school options that extend beyond our current exam school and lottery high school options.

I have lived in the neighborhood directly off of Belgrade Ave. for almost 15 years and have been disappointed by the slow development of the neighborhood, all while other Roslindale neighborhoods, like Roslindale Village, have come together to make improvements for the betterment of the direct and broader communities — and to the benefit of its neighbors and the businesses that rely on it. What's better than a high-quality school to boost and enrich a neighborhood?

I hope that my neighbors will review the proposed site plan, and take the time to get to know the school, its leadership and its high-performing scholars before raising objection. I ask my fellow neighbors to support the new Roxbury Prep Roslindale High School.

These students deserve a new school and I believe that they will be a positive addition to our neighborhood. Let's together make them feel welcome.

. . . and Shout!

On St. Patrick's Day some 55 years ago, a Water Department employee for the city achieved his proverbial 18 minutes of fame when he shouted from the rafters of the old Boston Garden.

His yell occurred during a few moments of awkward silence at the farewell for Celtics legend Bob Cousy. When Rapid Robert, the name given to Cousy by legendary announcer Johnny Most, became teary-eyed and speechless, it was then that Joe Dillon - "Snuffy" according to my neighbor Leo, formerly from South Boston - bellowed "We love ya, Cooz!" This broke the tension and the 13,909 attendees began cheering again. Thus the planned 7-minute farewell stretched into a 20-minute one, with No. 14's sniffling causing it to be cleverly identified as The Boston Tear Party.

Three weeks ago at Symphony Hall, an attendee at a Boston Pops concert featuring a number of John Williams compositions associated with Steven Spielberg-directed movies attempted something similar.

Let me set the stage, literally. A guest maestro conducted the first half of the performance, up to intermission. After the break it was John William himself - no spring chicken at 85 years of age - who, having been introduced, carefully mounted the conductor's podium. After sustained and rousing applause, as Williams turned his back to the audience preparing to raise his baton to begin conducting, a Snuffy Dillon impersonator in those few seconds of respectful silence bellowed from one of the balconies, "We love ya, John!" Unlike the old Garden crowd, no additional applause ensued, as the man's warm declaration of feeling merely hung in the air unanswered.

This raises the question about civility. Was the Boston Pops catcall civil? Did it deserve a response by him or the fellow-attendees? I'm not a regular evening commuter to Mass Ave and Huntington, so I'm not in a position to judge.

My Kind of Town/

All of which segues to etiquette at graduations, which proliferate during June. Having been to almost a dozen college and high school commencement exercises and several dozen middle school ones, I notice that there frequently seems to be an inverse relationship between the decibel level of applause/number of catcalls ("That's my Samantha!") and the individual graduate's achievement level.

In other words, when the valedictorian's and salutatorian's names are called at graduations, the applause for them seldom matches the level accorded those who barely scraped by with enough credits to graduate. The clapping and the hooting for the art, music, drama, and science fair contestants/winners are well inferior sound-wise to those who chose not to participate.

Interestingly enough, the applause for star athletes is frequently no louder or softer than for those who were second and third stringers, thus giving rise to the belief that at this time all athletes, away from their sports venues, are indeed equal.

And so, if you've recently attended any high or middle school graduations, may you relish the achievements of the graduates for whom you clapped so vigorously, or even hooted.

revenue, so serious reservations on the schedule that speaks to parking meters until that gets addressed, and that's just a matter of basic fairness, it's everyone playing by the rules being punished, and once we increase the fines, it's going to increase circling the block, it's going to increase handicapped parking abuse and fraud, and it's going to decrease our parking meter revenue."

Boston Transportation Department (BTD) Parking Clerk Stephen Maguire said a new law will go into effect in September 2018 to cut down on placard abuse.

"I sit on a handicapped placard task force that's run through MassDOT through the registrar's office and they've passed legislation to make it more difficult for doctors to just sign off on placards and hand them out, like everyone gets a placard, so they are cracking down on the doctors that are issuing these placards," he said.

The new law would fine those who lie on a handicapped plate application or falsely report a lost placard $500 for a first offense and $1,000 for ongoing offenses.

Flaherty pointed out that the placards themselves aren't really the issue in the city, but that they could be required to pay the meter just like everyone else.

"That's a legislative issue, and I believe legislation was filed to have that actually happen to make handicapped placard people pay the meters, but I'm not sure how far along that is," he said.

fect venue for this event because it has the two spaces. This is a real gem, this children's garden here," she added as she took in her surroundings.

"Feel your body rotating," Joshua Gordon advises a little girl at the cello. "You're holding your fingers too far down."

A little boy squelches a note on the clarinet... then a sheep baa note. "Yeah! Exactly! Good job!" Kelli O'Connor encourages as the boy's eyes widen in surprise.

Two girls try to get sounds out of reeds, laughing at the noise-maker effects they produce.

Andrea Segar fingers "Twinkle Twinkle Little Star" on a violin as the child chinning the other end of it brings the bow back and forth over the same string, looking very serious.

A clarinet/oboe duet of "Frère Jacques" comes together after a few false starts.

Rhythmic bursts – distant but still faintly audible to library patrons – come down from Weld Hall as William Manley stands behind a conga as a group of kids facing him get into the basics of hand percussion and instrumental call and response.

As the instrument petting zoo begins to wind down, Boldin gets at its essence.

"For kids, the idea of figuring out how the instrument works – with the guidance of their Chameleon artist – and making some sound and feeling it in their hands, that's the goal."

Hyde Park Resident earns Eagle Scout rank

Alexander M. Grant

We're happy to inform that Hyde Park's own, Alexander M. Grant, has successfully earned the rank of Eagle Scout. Alex joined Scouting very young and came up through the Cub Scouts ranks, joined Troop 3 Dedham and recently celebrated his Eagle Court of Honor, thanking friends, family, Scout Leaders for helping him down the Scouting trail so he could attend Boy Scouting's highest rank of Eagle.

Alex's Eagle service project evolved into a very large 'soldier care project' that included but wasn't limited to getting donated items for deployed American soldiers' enjoyment such as baby wipes, hand sanitizer, instant oatmeal, gum, trail mix, beef jerky, deodorant, sunscreen, playing cards, athletic socks, lip balms, magazines, paperbacks, DVD action movies, protein bars, sunflower seeds, and oh so much more!

Special thanks goes to the soldiers at Hanscom AFB for hosting over two dozen Scouts, parents and Scout Leaders who did the drop off at Hanscom AFB and the always-magnificent, Second Lt. Jamecia L. Lazard, USAF Budget Analyst, who got her office to come in on a weekend so the Scouts' parents didn't have to take a weekday off to make this HUGE multicar delivery happen.

Alex Grant will graduate from Mary Lyons Charter School in Brighton on June 13 and then attends Wentworth Institute of Technology in the fall.

2018 Honda Accord Hybrid

There is no question that car manufacturers are all building plug-in hybrid and electric vehicles with and without extender engines to extend the vehicle range (which is a big plus on full electric vehicles). Hybrid and electric vehicles were not something I would have recommended in the past. But times have changed, as have my opinions about these vehicles.

Our test car – a 2018 Honda Accord hybrid was built in May and sent out for press test drives and reviews. I received it with just over 1,000 miles on the odometer.

This Accord hybrid is a great car in every way, starting with the all new design, which includes the loss of the V/6 engine. Available engines are now the 1.5 liter, turbo 4-cylinder with 192 horsepower and the 2.0 liter, turbo 4-cylinder with 252 horsepower. When I heard that Honda dropped the V/6 in the new Accord, I was skeptical about the decision, as were a lot of my peers. However, the new turbo powered 4-cylinder engines actually outperform the older V/6 engines while providing better gas mileage and cleaner emissions. Gas mileage averaged 47 MPG and the hybrid battery gauge never went below the 1/4 level and would recharge during my drive to work.

Power and smoothness is amazing as is the firm, but not harsh, ride. It has a center mounted large touchscreen display that is easy to read, even on sunny days. Front heated seats are firm with multiple adjustments, and there is room for four with comfort. The trunk has a low entry level and is full size. The outside design does not have sharp lines or edges; all corners are rounded.

This car is made to drive on either short or long hauls. Honda has done a great job on this hybrid, as well as on all the new models. If you are thinking of buying a new Accord, test drive the hybrid version – I know you will be as impressed as I was. Base price starts around $26,000 (plus $875 destination fee).

care of the planters. So you come out and you water it periodically and pick out the trash, unfortunately, and pick off dead flowers. There's no more commitment to it than that."

Aside from that, Horn gave an update on KPHB's upcoming participation in the HP150 Family Fun Day on Saturday, June 9 from Noon-4 p.m. at Kelley Field (25 Turtle Pond Parkway), where it will have a booth with "games and crafts that meet our mission".

These include a recycling relay race, make-your-own birdfeeders, and make-your-own wildflower seed bombs. "You put seeds into a little clay ball and just throw it somewhere," Horn said before giving out a short laugh and continuing, "and then let the flowers bloom, hopefully."

Additionally, she spoke of KHPB's affiliation plans with Keep Massachusetts Beautiful (KMB), which had been in process going into last winter.

"That's a done deal. So now we're a local chapter of Keep Massachusetts Beautiful." As an affiliate, KHPB can now apply for grants through KMB, which has 501c3 status. Because of this, tax deductible donations can now also be made to KHPB.

Beyond that, Horn said that they're a good resource. "They have a lot of knowledge and experience, so I'm always emailing or calling and asking advice."

As she talks, the group has circled around the planter at the foot of the Clock as Marta Acevedo-Thomas – proprietor of Pure Joy Flowers (84 Fairmount Ave.) and coordinator of the weekend's event – runs through a flower planting demonstration.

Although not expressly stated, Acevedo-Thomas' demonstration belies the primary goal – as volunteer Scott Kriscenski mentioned as an aside after delivering a load from Ferrara's Greenhouse (19 Emmett St.) – of "keeping these things alive."

Speaking later, across Fairmount Avenue from her shop, Acevedo-Thomas pauses to chat.

"I try to get the flowers from Ferrara, because they're local and I want to support local businesses. So Main Streets gives me a budget and I divide it based on what we need, and I try to keep everything here. Like the soil, I bought it from True Value (1206 River St.) instead of going to Fall River, somewhere the manufacturer told me to go."

The plant selection is a mix of geraniums, spike, petunias, licorice, and sweet potato.

"The reason we have these plants is because they are heat resistant and they're just beautiful. They do well in the outside environment," Acevedo-Thomas explained.

When asked if the sweet potato can actually be eaten, she started laughing.

"It does have potatoes. I have never eaten them, so I don't know if they are ornamental or if they are for consumption. I would not dare to consume them."

This operation – which is much larger than it was last year – involves groups placing the flowers and other groups actually planting them.

One such pair is Ayana McCoy and Valencia Rollins. Both found out about this online.

"I walk by these planters everyday because I get the commuter rail and the bus," McCoy said before continuing that she thought it would be nice to beautify the neighborhood and meet some of her neighbors. Living nearby, she chuckled and added another motivation.

"I thought it would be cool to walk by my handiwork."

Rollins – a self-described "brand new gardener" – was looking to meet likeminded people, but also expressed her hope that there could be some sort of local government sponsored plantings along Truman Highway.

"It just would really look nice if there were mass

BOSTON AREA RAPE CRISIS CENTER ANNOUNCES PUBLIC WORKSHOPS TO ADDRESS SEXUAL HARASSMENT AND ASSAULT

The Boston Area Rape Crisis Center (BARCC) is offering several upcoming public workshops to educate people on how to support survivors of sexual harassment and assault as well as to how to take action to prevent sexual violence. BARCC launched the public series earlier this year, as #MeToo continued in the public spotlight and demand for BARCC services and trainings increased.

These free workshops are open to the public. At the first workshop, 25 participants learned critical bystander intervention skills, and attendance at upcoming workshops is expected to grow. Survivors, friends, parents, and significant others are welcome to learn more about self-care, consent, bystander intervention, and how to respond when someone tells you they've been assaulted.

This is a chance to get an inside look at best practices in the field of ending sexual violence—not to mention connect with others, practice self-care, and more! Workshop topics, dates, and short descriptions are below. Workshops take place Monday evenings at the Family Justice Center, 989 Commonwealth Ave., Boston MA 02215. RSVP at bit.ly/BARCC2018RSVP and share that you're going on Facebook at bit.ly/BARCCFBevents.

What Do I Say? Ways to Support Survivors - June 18, 2018, 6:30-8:30 p.m. Have you ever had a friend or family member tell you that they've experienced sexual violence and not known what to say? Join this workshop to learn an innovative model for responding when someone in your life shares with you that they're a survivor.

the Cape (where McElligott was living at the time) and I was always hanging in there. And I had thought about it (becoming a barber) before, because I always wanted to get out of roofing, but I never really put that much thought into it." Continuing with his story, he quoted his friend. "He's like, 'You're always in here enough! Why don't you go and get your damn license and come work for me!'"

A month later, he was in barber school in Fall River.

After getting his apprentice's license 10 months later, he began his new career, returning to his friend's shop (though his friend soon moved to Florida), opened a shop in Sandwich with his master barber partner, moved out to California for a year, and then came back East to work in Lynnfield. He recently got his master's license.

McElligott explained the professional freedom this brought. "Once you get the master's, that means you don't have to work under anyone, and you can own your own shop."

Hearing about Carlevale's retirement plans, someone suggested that McElligott see the owner of the building, Pat Tierney of Tierney Real Estate.

Not knowing what to expect, he got along well with Tierney – who wanted to keep the space as a barber shop – and with Carlevale – who was ready to retire.

McElligott was concerned that neither George nor Al – the two barbers who worked with Joe – wanted to take over. He went for it anyways, hedging with a six month lease.

He explained his rationale. "Well, I wasn't going to commit to two years if the place is failing, you know what I mean? Because then I'd be stuck."

As McElligott described it, he's "basically starting over," with his customers from Lynnfield, the Cape, and California to far away to follow him to Hyde Park, and he spoke realistically about starting up his business in a downtown with its fair share of shops.

"I'm going to give it six months, you know what I mean. And then – if it works – I'm going to revamp the whole shop and modernize it a little bit and, you know, just try to add a little bit of flavor to the shop than is already here for all the customers, and just bring a little young blood to it."

McElligott laughed when told of Joe's advice: advertise... which Joe never had to do. But take that advice he has, concentrating – for the most part – on social media.

"Everything's on social media now, anyways. You can put some flyers up, but people won't even look at it unless it's on their phone," he explained.

As for the actual haircut end of the business, McElligott described it as "ever evolving" and compared the haircuts of his youth (boy's regular, flat top, wiffle) with today.

"You have to keep up with it nowadays because no kid's going to come in and say they want the same haircut."

He used, as an example, a kid wanting a haircut like Rob

Gronkowski. "Alright, which Gronk? The bald Gronk? The crew cut Gronk? The kind of long on the top but bald on the sides Gronk? You know what I mean? You've got to keep up with it or else it will get away from you."

As McElligott sits by the window, a man with flyers comes in and asks him to post one for a party that will be held in honor of Joe next Tuesday.

Can he see himself being in the Shop for as long?

"I think about that. All my friends that grew up in Hyde Park are, like, 'You're the new Joe,' and I say, 'Yeah. If I can only be that lucky.' That would be the goal. How long can I be here?" He answers his own question, "I'd like to be here forever."

A boy walks in with his mom. "New guy, right?" the mom asks. "Yep."

"Okay. Can you help him out?" the mom says of her son, standing silently by.

"Absolutely," Corey replies. "Have a seat, bud."

Corey can be reached at Corey's Barbershop on Facebook and @CoreysBarbershop on Instagram. You can also do it the old fashioned way and call 617-364-9555.

Keep in mind that even though there are a number of locations in the area being proposed for the dispensary spot, nothing has been set in stone yet for a number of reasons.

Flynn said that Evergreen Farms, the marijuana dispensary owners, have been making some very preliminary interactions with the community's neighborhood associations regarding their proposals. However, Evergreen Farms was not obligated to do this at this stage.

"Evergreen has already met with the other neighborhood associations to look at their proposals, which they did not have to do at this time," Flynn said. "It was done in good faith."

This is because the proposals are to be funneled through Boston's Emerging Industry's Director prior to being reviewed by evergreen in any way, as said by Flynn.

One thing mentioned by Flynn to keep in mind was that wherever the dispensaries due end up being placed within Hyde Park, they must be a certain distance apart from one another.

"Keep in mind that the dispensaries have to be more than half a mile apart when the time comes," Flynn said.

Another thing, or things, referenced by Flynn pertained to some of the logistics involved in orchestrating the actual abutters meeting when the process starts winding down and we get to that point.

"Once we have the abutters meeting, which is run by the Mayor's office and the Office of Neighborhood Services we need to find a venue to hold the meeting that is larger than where the typical Hyde Park neighborhood association meeting would take place."

In other Fairmount Hill news, Boston Police Department District E-18 Service Officer Paul Broderick reviewed the police log of the last month that pertains to the Fairmount Hill Area aloud to the group.

Over the last month in the Fairmount Hill area, there were zero instances of auto theft, zero instances of drug crime and zero instances of breaking and entering.

However, there were four incidents of assault and two occurrences of larceny that transpired over the last 30 days.

There was also one instance of robbery that transpired on April 23 on 9 Beacon St. A Dominos driver was waiting in his car and was suddenly robbed by a young black male armed with a handgun.

This issue is still under investigation.

Also, in one of the last month's two cases of vandalism that transpired in the area, a female had a vicinity carved into her auto-mobile.

much smoother ride moving forward.

“We’re going to begin this Wednesday paving curb to curb, so the permanent final paving will start on Wednesday, and it’s going to run Wednesday to Friday, but quite possibly into next week,” he said.

The replacement project, called the Southern Extra High Redundancy and Storage Project, will allow for uninterrupted service. The pipe placement now finishing in the Parkway is part of phase 1 of the project. The first contract/phase 1 was originally slated for an August completion date, so barring any problems in the final paving, it looks like phase 1 will be completed early. The Boston contract for the project called for 11,000 linear feet of 36-inch diameter pipe to be laid primarily in the Department of Recreation and Conservation’s (DCR) Stony Brook Reservation.

“It’s a 36 inch pipe and it creates redundancy. Prior to this project one pipe was installed I think in the ‘40s and ‘50s (completed in 1954), so now what we’re doing is we’re building another pipe that will create redundancy,” McLaughlin said. “When this new pipe comes online, you can take the old pipe offline, rehabilitate and reinstall that, and then once that is rebuilt, you can put that back into service and you have two lines providing service to the region.”

The original pipe stretches from Canton and Stoughton, through Norwood, Westwood, Dedham and Hyde Park to terminate at the West Roxbury Parkway. The redundant pipe goes from the Dedham Corporate Center through Hyde Park to end at the same area. McLaughlin said the MWRA’s capital plan currently calls for a rehabilitation and re-installation of the old pipe stretching through the towns listed above, but they have not settled on a start date. There are two more contracts for the full redundancy project, which will continue in Dedham. McLaughlin said they will continue work on the Dedham Parkway, and currently do not have a set date for completion.

“That is going to be done at a later date, basically we have three contracts; contract 1 was entirely in Boston, and contract 2 begins at the Boston-Dedham line,” he said. “The Dedham Parkway section of the Boston project will be paved curb to curb, I just don’t have a date at this moment.”

The projected completion date for both contracts 2 and 3 is set for the end of 2019.

McLaughlin said there have been issues in the past with the old pipe, and service interruptions, though rare, have occurred.

“There’s been a couple of issues, but nothing major,” he said. “But it’s made us take a look at the entire system and we like to go with redundancy and we’ve done this on the North Shore as well. We’ve looked at the system throughout the state, and we’ve prioritized what pipes need redundancy, and this was obviously one of them. You could have interruptions from just a leak, you could have a major rupture in one of the pipes and you could go down for quite a long time and, having redundancy available, you just switch over to the other line and no one feels any service impacts.”

MWRA has recently started a new notification system, so if there are any projects any resident would want to keep an eye on, they can go to mwra.com/updates/everbridge/join.html

plantings along there. It would be a beautiful thing. Other neighborhoods have it.”

Nearby, Megan Dineen and Ashlyn Melvin are following Acevedo-Thomas.

Dineen has been working at Main Streets since December and relates the ongoing process that she and Program Coordinator Thien Simpson follow with the planters.

“Me and Thien, we’ll take laps around here and we’ll pick through and take out all the trash, and stuff, when we’re just walking through town.”

After posting notices for volunteers, Dineen felt she should “probably be here” herself.

Melvin – whose mom owns the Dance Academy (1490 River St.) – is a Hyde Park resident, as Dineen is, and gave a brief Hyde Park family lineage, starting with her mom.

“She’s also lived in Hyde Park her whole life. My dad’s lived in Hyde Park his whole life. Her parents have lived in Hyde Park their whole lives... So we just thought that, yeah, it would be good to come do something. Make it pretty.”

Melvin added, “I hope that when someone drives down the street, that they notice that the flowers are so pretty.”

“Yeah,” Dineen finished. “I hope they see all of the effort that’s going into where we live, and stuff, and that they appreciate it.”
