ERNA's Odom recognized for community service

Mayor Martin J. Walsh presented Patricia Odom, the East River Neighborhood Association's (ERNA) co-chair, with an award at its monthly meeting on Monday, July 8 at 912 River St. before about 40 people.

"Thank you for meeting," Walsh said, noting he ran a civic organization in Dorchester before becoming a legislator. "I know most civic groups don't meet in the summertime. I know the work you do, and there's not a lot of gratefulness. Thank you for being the eyes and the ears of the neighborhood."

Walsh said the main reason for his visit was to present recognition to Odom, the first African American female recruiter for the Massachusetts Army National Guard.

"For the younger people in the room, if you're looking for a role model, I know we look to sports athletes all the time for role models," he said. "Pat is a role model. She's an Army sergeant, a teacher for 20 years in the Boston Public Schools, a business owner, an artist and a grandmother. She's always giving back to the community, and I want to congratulate you."

"The quest for adequate space is foremost on our minds," said Abigail Norman, director of the Eliot School, at a community meeting on June 24. "The school is flourishing."

Titled "Eliot School 340," the second space-planning meeting looked at moving the school.

"We spent 2018 exploring what it might look like to expand our schoolhouse on Eliot Street," Norman said. "This year, we're exploring what it might look like to move to a new Boston location."

"We have a history of moving," she told the full house of faculty, students, neighbors and supporters.

"We've been in three different locations [in Jamaica Plain] and changed its mission."

Expanding on site with an addition built on to the existing 1832 yellow brick schoolhouse hit a yellow brick wall of neighborhood opposition at the June 7, 2018 space planning meeting.

"I'm very upset," one visibly emotional neighbor told Norman at the time. "This will be a big impact on where we live."

National Night Out returning to Roslindale

Hundreds are expected to fill Adams Park and other locations next month for the annual National Night Out Celebration and information session.

The annual National Night Out (NNO) celebration is set to hit the entire city on Aug. 5, and the celebration will hit the Parkway at 5 p.m. at Adams Park.

The event is a community-building celebration, designed originally as a flashlight walk in the 90s for residents to take back their streets from crime but, according to Roslindale Community Center's Dennis Kirkpatrick, the event has become much more than that.

"The main idea here is to get the community to come together in a central location and get to know each other," he said. "Quite often they might not be aware of the organizations we ask to come and display. Some things like the Farmers Market, which has a variety of merchants, is well known, but they may not meet up with some of the neighborhood groups and various organizations active in the community. They might be interested in talking to social ser-

LANA talks CPA, RVMS

The Longfellow Area Neighborhood Association (LANA) met on Monday, July 8 and discussed a possible application for Community Preservation Act (CPA) Funds.

The meeting started with City of Boston Director of Community Relations Thadine Brown going over the uses and processes of the CPA that have been instituted since it was passed by a ballot vote in 2016. LANA members think they might be able to use CPA funds for the Roslindale Wetlands Urban Wild Park, accessible by Hazelmere Road. Brown said each proposal must be a capital improvement project or one-time funding and those submitting the proposal must have a maintenance plan for each proposal, which may include projects for affordable housing, open space, historic preservation or recreation.

"In Roslindale during the last round we only funded one project for $500,000, a path between Forest Hills at the Archdale Community Garden and the Arboretum Gateway," she said. "We're hoping to get more projects, which is one of my goals."

Herter Park hosting Free Fun Friday

The Friends of Herter Park are hosting the Highland Street Foundation's Free Fun Friday this week with the Charles River Watershed Association.

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Highland Street Foundation hosts events all over the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to get residents out to places they may not normally go to or be able to afford.

With this in mind, they have teamed up with the Friends of Herter Park and the Charles River Watershed Association to open up the Charles River in Allston Brighton to residents for free all day on July 12. There will be kayaking lessons with Paddle Boston – Charles River Canoe and Kayak, free ice cream from Ben & Jerry's, demonstrations from Bootstrap Compost, acting lessons from the Friends of Herter Park, and much more.

Charles River Watershed Association Communications Manager Maddie Wolters said they had good numbers for last year's event, and already have 4,000 people signed up this year.

"Last year we got about 900 participants at the Newton Boston Marriott. This year we moved to the (Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation) DCR's Herter Park," she said. "We have about 4,000 participants signed up, which is insane, but because there are thunderstorms in the forecast we're only expecting about half of that number to come. Even so, we have a lot of volunteers and a system in place where we've handled numbers like that before."

She said there will still be a host of free activities if the weather doesn't hold out on Friday.

"It's really cool, I think this is probably the biggest event that we've been planning," she said. "Our annual clean up has about 3,000 participants and we partner with six environmental groups to execute it, but we're really looking forward to using this event to educate a bunch of people about the Charles River."

She said they have about five different science activities lined up which involve water quality testing, a watershed in a box designed to show the effect of pollution and a station to show benthic micro invertebrates.

Highland Street Foundation Community Relations Manager Brian McNulty said this is the 11th year the organization is running the Free Fun Fridays, and they have several events across the state every week.

"The mission of the Highland Street Foundation is to create access and opportunity for low-income kids, summer camps, disability groups, parents, pretty much anyone who wants it," he said. "It's to get people off their phones and out and about to museums and watersheds and just generally outside."

McNulty said this is the first time they will have an event at Herter Park.

"It's pretty unique and I think it's our only interactive boat on the water event; we don't have anything besides the Charles River Watershed where you can jump on a boat or get on the water," he said.

McNulty said he tries to get out to two or three a week, and his most recent trip was to the Haverhill Printing Museum, and said it was amazing to see children, who have technology hundreds of years more advanced right in their pocket, engrossed in a simple printing press.

"They had the kids printing their own names for fun," he said. "And, on a typical Friday they don't get many people, but they had a couple hundred when I went and it was typically all families."

For more details and volunteer signup, please visit: <https://www.crrwa.org/free-fun-friday>. The event is scheduled for rain or shine.

Correction

In the July 4 issue of the Bulletin, in the article entitled 'Final Shattuck planning meeting frustrating for many' the statement, "We don't know how much space we'll need," was incorrectly attributed to Paul Lukez. Mr. Lukez was not in attendance at that meeting. The statement was, in fact, made by Carja R. Johnson Landscape Architect John Amedeo. We apologize for the mistake.

SMOKE = FIRE

Last week's edition of the Bulletin featured not one, but two stories regarding proposed marijuana dispensaries seeking to set up shop in local neighborhoods.

The Silver Therapeutics team gave a presentation before 40 members of the Mount Hope Canterbury Neighborhood Association on July 1 at the Home for Little Wanderers. As reported, it was the third time the group met with the community over the past several months to discuss their intention to construct a cannabis dispensary and farm on the City Farm site at 717-721 American Legion Highway.

We also covered when Arizona-based company Harvest, Inc. representatives addressed nearly 30 attendees of the Fairmount Hill Neighborhood on June 26 at the Boston Police Academy about their plans to compete for the rights to open and operate a dispensary located at 931 Hyde Park Ave.

This pattern of coverage reveals a few things we all need to keep in mind. It also raises a concern we have yet to see seriously addressed.

First and foremost, legal pot is no passing fad. Even armed with a successful ballot initiative that set the stage for legalization, devils were always in the details, notably neighborhood reactions. We live in a city where even the whispered suggestion of a liquor license can be met with fierce residential opposition. Marijuana sales, we imagined, would stake a claim atop the list of objectionable newcomers to the neighborhood fabric. In truth, the debates (and we count the two meetings recently covered) have been reasonable and cordial.

Our biggest problem with these debates isn't the reaction of residents but the fear that they, and the system for state approval, are being manipulated.

Kamala Harris, a Democrat and former California attorney general and current presidential candidate, has received plenty of criticism over pot prosecutions she oversaw as AG. In that role, she seemingly never hesitated to throw young folks into jail on possession and distribution charges. As a candidate, she alternatively has supported legalization efforts. The view by many can be summed up with one word: hypocrisy. There seems to be a similar phenomenon at work with local dispensary pitches.

Harvest's partners include former ranking Boston police officers from Hyde Park, including Larry Mayes, Daniel Linskey, and Larry Ellison. Attorney Mike Ross, a former Boston City Councilor who once served as its president, represented Silver Therapeutics and has successfully done the same for others in this business niche. Former Suffolk County Sheriff Andrea Cabral is on the team at Ascend Mass, on track to open in Boston, Cambridge and West Newton.

And most notable is former U.S. Congressman and Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt, also president of Medical Marijuana of Massachusetts. The company was granted, but not without a fair share of legal controversy, three of the licenses awarded by the state.

Reporter Luke O'Neal, writing for Boston Magazine, summed up the controversy:

"No stranger to accusations of underhanded deals, Delahunt was accused by the Massachusetts Republican Party of leveraging his relationship with DPH Commissioner Cheryl Bartlett — who once donated money to his PAC. Then, when the first group of 20 licensees was announced and Delahunt's group was awarded all three of the licenses it sought, Massachusetts Republicans lashed out again. 'The public cannot have faith in the decisions made by the Department of Public Health because of the apparent conflict of interest for Commissioner Bartlett and the secrecy surrounding the awarding of licenses,' wrote MassGOP executive director Rob Cunningham."

Delahunt, like Harris, also has the skeleton in his political closet of prosecuting the possession and sale of marijuana. "It's as if a local MADD chapter scooped up a suddenly vacated liquor license. Or PETA availed itself of loosened food truck restrictions to operate a sausage stand, maybe," O'Neal wrote.

None of this is surprising. Similar roles have been struck in the even-more-lucrative world of liquor licenses. Nevertheless, it isn't a vape that's leaving a bad taste in our mouth. One might hope, with assuredly unrewarded optimism, that there is eventually a moratorium on public officials using their reputations and power to indulge their bank accounts with their sudden appreciation for weed.

Just after a new superintendent takes office in Boston—after a nationwide search, no less—the former Minnesota resident runs the risk of being disheartened if she reads the current issue of The Atlantic Magazine. In the article entitled "Education Isn't Enough" the author dwells upon the assertion that "Great public schools are the product of a thriving middle class, not the other way around."

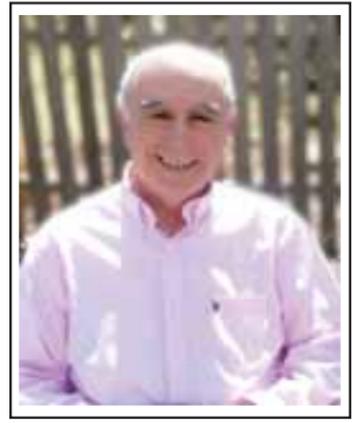

Based on this, it's not surprising the Lexington, Concord, and Newton have such wonderful schools. Of course, the argument can be made that many residents of those towns, though not in the nation's top 1%, are certainly in the upper—as opposed to middle—class because of their 6-figure take home salaries and 7-figure worth of their homes.

With the following percents totally new, disturbing, and shocking to me, the author goes on, without specifying the exact studies, that for public schools "Multiple studies have showed that only 20 percent of student outcomes can be attributed to schooling, whereas about 60 percent are explained by family circumstances, most significantly, income." Remember, this is for public schools only—not parochial or otherwise private schools.

His solution is to pay ordinary workers more by increasing the minimum wage and the salary threshold for overtime exemption. Thus parents might not have to work two jobs and earn more money with overtime; there's a better chance that they might be able to take their children to museums and to bookstores (a book owned is much more treasured than a book borrowed from a library); they might be more able to visit historical sites; they might be more able to have home computers and Internet connection; they might have more time to read to their children at bedtime and to help them with homework at the kitchen table.

Some of this has to ring true in Boston, where some educators just want to throw more money at teachers to increase learning: it has not worked. Merely increasing the school budget and the pay of teachers has not worked. But this is not to say that the disparity among what Commonwealth communities allocate for education should not be attempted to be bridged: if Weston wants to provide an admirable amount for its schools and cash-strapped communities such as Lawrence cannot match it, then it would be nice if the State stepped in to mitigate some, if not much, of the difference.

If only 20% of student outcomes are the result of schooling, hopefully including science labs, laptops, graphing calculators, clean lavatories, adequate desks, availability of counselling and nursing services, we're pushing a rock uphill Sisyphus-style to remedy the educational miasma characteristic of BPS. The author's reference to 60% of outcomes being the result of family circumstances points to the need for our economy to be a rising tide to lift all boats, especially those overburdened and running the risk of being swamped and overturned by the circumstance of poverty.

COME SEE WHY I LOVE MY SCHOOL

To the Editor:

To be a student at Roxbury Prep means being resilient. Every day, I make mistakes in my academic work, but I persevere and analyze those mistakes in order to not make them again. I am very lucky to have teachers who support me when I make mistakes because they have helped me see them as opportunities for growth.

To be a student at Roxbury Prep means being college-bound. My GPA is sustainable. I've taken AP World History, AP Physics and pre-AP Calculus, all before my senior year. It's exciting for me to know that the school is providing college courses. My teachers assess my work and push my performance so that I can get admitted to an excellent college, but more importantly, they are pushing me so that I will succeed once I am enrolled by giving me an attempt at college rigor while I still have the support of the RPHS community and resources.

To be a student at Roxbury Prep means building a community and being an agent of change. Having this campus in Roslindale would allow all of my peers to be under one roof for the first time. I am a math tutor, slam poet, choir member, softball player, actor (in Macbeth), and a club member of RoxPrism. If I weren't involved in these activities, I would not even have met some of my peers in the other grades because we attend school on different campuses. As a rising 12th grader, I will not be able to see the incoming underclassman as much. It makes my day better to know I have a relationship with an upperclassman that is solid and now since they have graduated, I can carry on their legacy with a strong passion for learning as well as creating new relationships. Soon, when we have a new facility on Belgrade Avenue, seniors like me can become role models for younger students. My Rozzi neighbors would also benefit because their kids can now have a high school that is closer to them that is academically excellent with dedicated staff that help them through the journey that they choose.

I love my school, and I would love for you to come visit us at one of our campuses so you can come see how we work and how we build community! Hope to see you soon!

Mayor's Coffee Hour without the Mayor

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

Mayor Marty Walsh could not make it to his event on Tuesday at the Lt. Edward Walsh and Firefighter Michael Kennedy Tot Lot because of a family situation.

"But he has a lot of staff here and I know there's many, many issues people want to talk about in West Roxbury," said Chief of Environment, Energy and Open Space Chris Cook.

Cook was among more than two dozen officials, city employees and elected politicians at the event, including Chief of Streets Chris Osgood. Osgood and Boston Transportation Planner Charlotte Fleetwood were on hand to discuss the finer points of the proposed plan for a road diet on Centre Street. A plan, Osgood said, that has been getting a lot of feedback from residents and businesses since the June 20 meeting, both for and against.

"So we've certainly heard a range of different perspectives since that meeting, which is exactly what we want," he said. "Over the course of the summer, Charlotte and I and others will be meeting with different business groups and resident groups that have an interest in giving feedback, offering ideas and asking questions about what was presented at the last meeting. All of these ideas and suggestions will lend a hand in redefining a plan that we're going to present in the fall."

Osgood said they have met with West Roxbury Main Streets and the West Roxbury Business and Professional Association on the matter and will be meeting later with civic groups as they come up.

"We encourage any group or individual who has an interest to go to the web site that Charlotte has set up to participate in those conversations," he said.

For a look at the proposal as it currently stands and to give feedback, go to boston.gov/departments/transportation/centre-street-design-project.

Regarding another disputed issue, many residents spoke with their public officials to support or oppose the Roxbury Prep High School at 361 Belgrade Ave. About a dozen residents wore stickers in support of their side.

"The rumor mill is rampant over this issue," said Bellevue Hill Neighborhood Association President Ginny Gass, wearing a sticker showing her opposition to the current project. "So who knows? You can only do what you can and the rest we leave to the political machine."

Resident Eddie Doctor said he was still hopeful the high school will become a reality.

"Roslindale doesn't have a high school, and we haven't had one in 40 years. I have lived in Roslindale for 30 years, and my daughter is starting high school at Roxbury Prep in August," he said. "One of the things that she expressed to me is she's hoping to get the full high school experience, where underclassmen can talk to upperclassmen and learn from them. But they can't now, because the schools are split."

Director of Community Preservation Christine Poff was also on hand to talk with residents regarding possible proposals for funds the Community Preservation Act Fund may provide. Poff said they have been pushing the neighborhood hard to remind them that there's tens of millions of dollars on the table. Last year no proposals were submitted to the Community Preservation Office. She said she's speaking with several neighborhood groups and organizations like Rose's Bounty, the food pantry housed at the Stratford Street Church, about some historic preservation and rehabilitation the building could use.

"There's been a lot of discussions and I can tell you there are proposals for Billings Field with Parkway Youth Softball and the Stratford Street Church," to name a few she said. "We've got about eight projects on the line... We're not expecting all of them to apply this round, a lot of it is just idea-generating, but we are working with people to build on those project ideas. West Roxbury Main Streets wants to build a park seating area by all the shops and the Little League is definitely coming in over by Catholic Memorial too."

District 6 City Councilor Matt O'Malley spoke during the meeting and reminisced about the old park and said he was amazed to see what it has become today.

"I remember when this was not a sought-after playground.

There was a great community effort to come together and build. Some may remember those great mammoth wooden structures" he said. "I still have scars from the splinters, but it was great. And then to come back with this amazing place and name it after two heroes, Mike Kennedy and Edward Walsh, two firefighters and two heroes from the neighborhood. It's just a great way to preserve their legacies."

estate phase now," Norman said. "The plans that Design Lab architects drew up in 2018, we've put on the shelf."

Norman admitted that it's difficult to expand on site. She introduced Jamaica Plain architect Ed Forte who is co-chair of the building committee.

"How does the [current] building align with the school mission?" Forte said. "Our fundamental mission is to bring the arts to all, but there's no handicap accessibility in the schoolhouse now," he said. We're bursting at the seams with woodworking, sewing and upholstery shops. We're using every square inch of space. We need 15,000 square feet; we now have 7,000."

As early as 2014, the Eliot School moved its administration offices to the old Boy Scout building at 891 Centre St. In 2018 it moved its offices to 253 Amory St. and added its first accessible classroom.

Accessibility is of great concern to the Eliot School. Forte explained that to bring the existing building up to accessible code would take up almost one half of the old building.

"There isn't even space for a welcoming reception area," he said.

Norman introduced the set of consultants for the second space planning phase, Jennifer Gilbert and Traggorth Companies.

Gilbert was honest.

"The place you've been in a long time may not fit," she said. "How do you think about another site?"

"It's big decision," Gilbert said. "The Eliot School is looking to find options that are financially sustainable; where to find a home for the next century?"

"You've been on this site for almost 350 years. Is this feasible now? There are other options. Renting space, ownership or a joint venture," Gilbert said. "Geography is important. It plays a part. It has to be near transit lines, commuter rail. What are the square footage costs? We've cast a wide net: Jamaica Plain, Roxbury, Dorchester and Roslindale."

Before separating into the consultant-preferred break-out-table-format, Norman summed up the next process.

"The first year we looked at on-site. This year, the second year, an offsite option," she said. "The board will come together at a retreat in March 2010 and weigh each option and make a decision. Fundraising for that decision will start then."

Table One said that the "land and the school are jewels and it would be a shame to move."

"We risk changing the culture," said one resident at that table. "It's a quaint little craft school. The demographics might dramatically change."

A neighbor at Table 2 observed that another Jamaica Plain institution, the Children's Museum, "made a very successful move 40 years ago."

Founded in 1913 at Pinebank, The Children's Museum relocated to the Mitton Mansion on Burroughs St in 1935. In 1979 it moved to an old wool warehouse on Fort Point Channel where it thrives today.

Using that example, one person suggested the school move to the abandoned Eblana Brewery building on Heath Street; this might work with a joint venture with JPND, he said. JPND has a history of adaptive reuse of old breweries.

"Many of us are connected to the building," said a neighbor who suggested picking it up and moving it to new location.

"Perhaps a partnership with The Trustees of Reservations," she said.

Wherever it moves, there was a consensus that the Eliot School needed a built-in revenue stream.

A media lab, gallery space, retail, café and function hall were listed. Moving to the Flower Exchange on Albany Street was suggested as a source of revenue to underwrite school programming in a partnership with that new developer.

Moving to John Eliot

Square, a partnership with Northeastern, and tapping into wealthy alumni were other ideas tossed out.

Most agreed that the Eliot School site had great real estate value.

"We are in a position of power," one school supporter said. "Developers would be very interested in partnering with the school."

According to Norman, Gilbert and The Traggorth Companies will spend the next few months analyzing the options of moving the school, either whole or in part, to a new location.

"We expect to hold another community meeting, most likely in late fall," Norman said. "We have a lot of thinking to do between now and then."

While Roslindale only had one project approved for the last round of funding, West Roxbury, South Boston and the Bay Village had none, for which she said the city is trying to remedy. She said they get a total of about $35 million each year for these projects through the CPA's matching state funds and what Boston can submit, so they want to have a proposal approved from each neighborhood each funding round.

Brown said a makeover or clean up of the Roslindale Wetlands Urban Wilds would be a good project, but residents would have to show a funding source or a maintenance plan. Residents said they have been maintaining the site for 15 years on a volunteer basis, which Brown said is a good start.

"You have a good group of folks who are willing to maintain that space, that's definitely something we'd like to see, but we would have to talk to make sure we know who is maintaining that space," she said.

According to the Boston Zoning Map, the Urban Wild is owned by the City of Boston, so the Boston Parks Department would most likely have to weigh in on the issue.

LANA Board Member Sue Forti also gave an update from the Roslindale Village Main Streets (RVMS) through a letter from RVMS Executive Director Alia Hamada Forest, who could not make it to the meeting.

Forti read that the Poplar Street improvement project is well underway with more than $50,000 to work with, and have already installed new trash bins at the site, with plans for more benches, artwork and wayfinding.

Forti also said Forest's letter stated they are moving along with the project to close Birch Street to vehicular traffic to make it a pedestrian square. She said the initial pilot in May went very well with 238 people responding in a survey about the proposal, with an 80 percent approval rating.

"There were definitely people who think it's a bad idea because of parking," Forti said. "But the thing is, it's not short-term parking there on Birch Street, and the businesses on Birch Street say they don't feel like they're going to lose any customers because of parking when this happens."

She RVMS will be tasked with maintaining it.

Board Member Rachel Young also brought up the idea of participating more in the annual Roslindale Parade.

"Traditionally, LANA has had a presence helping at the end of the parade," she said. "We don't want to bite off more than we can chew, but we're thinking about somehow supporting the parade again at the end in cleanup or any of the other activities there at Fallon Field. We'll have an update at our September meeting, but if anyone would like to get involved please feel free to reach out."

LANA can be contacted at longfellowarea.com/contact-us/.

Artist Judith Robichaud also said the signups for the 15th annual Roslindale Open Studios are currently open at roslindaleopenstudios.org. The event itself is set for Oct. 19 and 20, and she said that, pending a Tuesday vote at the Boston Zoning Board of Appeals, Turtle Pond Brewery will open its doors at the Roslindale Substation as a permanent fixture in the neighborhood and a group studio to boot.

"The last day for applications to set something up is July 15," she said.

State Rep. Edward Coppinger Representative Patrick Brown said his office is setting up a meeting with the Massachusetts Department of Recreation and Conservation regarding the intersection at Walter Street and Centre Street. No date has yet been given.

vice agencies, doctor's offices, senior housing organizations, and we even have real estate agents. We invite various credit unions and banks, and those are people you don't always see at the Farmers Market, and you get those people out so they have that information and outreach."

Kirkpatrick said it's also a way for people to meeting the Boston Police Department, specifically the officers at the District E-5 Station for most of West Roxbury and Roslindale.

"Getting people to meet and greet and visit with the local officers is important. If you can put a face to a police officer it really helps," he said. "People won't be moved to dial 911 or 311 sometimes, but if they meet someone in a social atmosphere such as this, they might say, 'oh I've got this problem in my neighborhood I've been meaning to ask you about.' The officers will say you need to call this or that number or it even sets the stage for the officer to ask them for their number to call later and get more information on an issue."

Kirkpatrick said he's seen it happen when an elderly neighbor suddenly decided that it was more efficient and faster to get to the grocery store by walking down the double yellow line in the middle of the street. He said he didn't know if the neighbor had family or how they could be reached, so he reached out to the Community Service Office at E-5.

"I said I was concerned about this person's safety and well-being, and they were able to take the ball and get through from there," he said, adding the police went through property records and information at City Hall to find the neighbor's family. "They were able to reach out to the family who could then come and see this senior person and got them into a care facility rather than taking a chance and walking down the middle of the street. The police are more than just crime fighters, you would be surprised the things they can do."

The event will feature entertainment from locals, information kiosks from social services in the neighborhood and the annual Community Recognition Award, to be presented by Boston Mayor Marty Walsh. Kirkpatrick said the award recipients are decided by the organizers of the NNO, sometimes days before the actual celebration. He said they've had residents back out so they don't want to jump the gun.

"There are some people out there who are very humble and do not feel that their contributions to the community should have accolades you know?" he said. "A couple of names have been thrown around and even I don't have an idea of who's it going to be."

Kirkpatrick said his organization, the Roslindale Community School Council, is the non-profit in residence at the Roslindale Community Center, and puts on the yearly event. He said originally it was held by the Healthy Roslindale Coalition, which was a member of the Healthy Neighborhoods movement.

"Eventually, Healthy Roslindale ceased to exist and at that point in time I had been very aware of them doing this event. They had an office in the building and we were interested in taking over," he said.

The Community Center raises money every year for the event, and Kirkpatrick said they generally have some funds left over that they donate to E-5's charitable fund, which is used for the Halloween Celebration every year or helping families with Christmas. He said last year they had about $380 leftover for the police fund.

City releases RFI for program to reduce food and yard waste

The City of Boston is seeking information from interested parties for a potential large-scale program that would reduce the amount of food and yard waste that residents currently dispose of with their trash for weekly curbside collection. Respondents should focus on how their recommendations would decrease food waste, create cost savings for the City, decrease environmental impacts and support the City's goals to go carbon neutral by 2050.

The purpose of this Request for Information (RFI) is to narrow respondents' scope by asking them to focus on how the City can reduce the amount of organics (food and yard waste) that is disposed of through weekly curbside trash collection. This RFI is looking for respondents to consider short term (2019-2024) solutions to this problem while considering the effectiveness of increasing the City's composting services, increasing the usage of garbage disposals and rolling out a large scale communications plan to educate residents how to better utilize these systems and how they can contribute to improving the environmental health of the City. We are also asking respondents to look at this problem and provide recommended solutions through a financial perspective in addition to environmental impacts.

While specific contracts are outside the scope of this solicitation, the City of Boston hopes to gain a comprehensive understanding of options currently available to reduce food and yard waste from ending up in incinerators. From this information, the City of Boston expects to confirm and narrow its interest in such an arrangement before proceeding with a full Request for Proposals (RFP) which respondents to this RFI can help shape, and therefore be in a stronger position when an RFP is published. Respondents are encouraged to provide creative solutions that maximize potential benefits and minimize financial risks to the City.

The response deadline is Wednesday, August 29, 2019, at 5 p.m. View the Request for Information to learn more: boston.gov/sites/default/files/divert_organics_from_residential_waste_stream_rfi.pdf

Novena to St. Claire

Ask St. Claire for three favors, 1 business, 2 impossible. Say nine Hail Marys for nine days, with lighted candle. Pray whether you believe or not. Publish on the ninth day. Powerful novena. Say "May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be praised, adored, glorified, now and forever, throughout the whole world. Amen." Your request will be granted, no matter how impossible it may seem.
—S.G.H.

Miracle Prayer

Dear Heart of Jesus, in the past I have asked You for many favours. This time, I ask you this very special one (mention favour). Take it, dear Heart of Jesus, and place it within Your own broken heart where Your Father sees it. Then, in His merciful eyes, it will become Your favour, not mine. Amen. Say for three days, promise publication and favour will be granted.
—S.G.H.

St. Jude's Novena

May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be adored, glorified, loved and preserved throughout the world, now and forever. Sacred Heart of Jesus pray for us. St. Jude, worker of miracles, pray for us. St. Jude, helper of the hopeless, pray for us. Say this prayer 9 times a day. By the 9th day your prayer will be answered. It has never been known to fail. Publication must be promised. Thank you St. Jude. My Prayers were answered.
In gratitude for helping me.
—S.G.H.

"Where House Meets Home"

I have attended both meetings regarding trying to make Centre Street safer. At both meetings I have been impressed by the turnout and the civility of the meetings even when people were making opposing remarks. I can only hope it is something that will continue in the meetings ahead.

As I said in my previous letter, it is a shame that it took a death on Centre Street to truly focus on this issue.

I realize that there is going to be uneasiness with the idea proposed by the City of Boston. I am sure people felt the same way when a generation ago angle parking was eliminated from most of Centre Street. I can understand people asking 'can't we keep the four lanes but make the crosswalks safer.' I just think we are past the point of tweaking here and there to make a noticeable difference on safety.

There are two factors that must be in play as well.

One is Enforcement. My one disappointment at the meetings is to see the Captain of Area E-5 at the head table and nothing is said in the opening remarks about enforcement. That needs to change at future meetings. I know he is retired, but I would suggest to the Captain of E-5 to find Officer Kilduff and invite him to a roll call of those assigned to E-5. He can tell those present about how he handled traffic enforcement.

The other and the hardest to change is simply US. Yes, I got pulled over by Kilduff (received a warning). We have to stop pointing fingers. Some will say it is people outside of West Roxbury to blame, but that is unlikely. The people using side streets as a cut through are US as well. It is not just drivers. We all see pedestrians not use crosswalks or won't wait for the light to change. Simply put, but harder to achieve, we need to pay closer attention to what is happening around us.

There is much work to be done, but I am encouraged by what has happened so far in terms of trying to make Centre Street safer.

ROAD DIET PROPOSED FOR CENTRE ST.

To the Editor:

Does anyone really believe the "traffic engineers" statement that the reduction in travel lanes would affect traffic flow only during peak rush hour and increase travel time by only 2 minutes?

This plan is sponsored by the same geniuses who thought it would be a good idea to choke the bridge over the railroad tracks at the police station down to one lane, resulting in traffic backups from the Holy Name Rotary to VFW Pkwy. If the Centre St. plan is adopted we can look forward to tie ups from Jamaica Plain to Rte. 1.

Here's a thought; repave the street, install speed bumps and ENFORCE the speed limit.

*R. McMurphy
W. Roxbury*

EXCITED ABOUT CENTRE ST. IMPROVEMENTS

To the Editor:

As a resident of West Roxbury, I am excited about the changes that are potentially coming to Centre Street. I was very impressed by the plan the Boston Transportation Department outlined for making the street safer and the rationale they provided supporting their design. Also, as a member of the West Roxbury Bicycle Committee, I can state definitively that the bicycle advocacy here is completely home-grown and is the result of many years of riding in and commuting to West Roxbury. We organized on our own volition, and the response to our organizing from local cyclists has been so strong that the Boston Cyclists Union has started to use us as an example of how other neighborhoods in the city should organize, and several have followed suit.

The reason we are so excited about this plan is because of this picture:

<https://drive.google.com/file/d/1NzrA4mnt3SWzEKaLHhpqy0vXzLGdDPzj/view> This is a picture of a perfect main street, and it fits the dimensions of Centre St. exactly. Almost anybody would agree that it is a picture of a community center that we all want to strive toward. It solves the safety issues for pedestrians and bicyclists. After two community meetings, I understand that the only real opposition to this vision is the concern by some residents that this change will cause more cut-through traffic on some streets. This seems like a valid concern, and I think we need to address it, but there are ways to handle it. I encourage those who are voicing this concern to work with BTM proactively to solve it instead of taking a NIMBY approach of blocking a change that will bring a greater good.

taments to the patriotism of our country and its citizens," Walsh continued as he thanked Odom for being co-chair of the association.

"I never realized that what I did in the past would reflect years later," Odom said as she accepted the award. "Thank you so much. This is quite an honor."

Odom was equally thrilled when Walter Apperwhite, an aide to district City Councilor Tim McCarthy, gave her a citation from the councilor.

"In this day and age, to be first in anything is amazing, and a shame," Apperwhite said. "I say a shame because there should be many like you, but you are a pioneer."

He added that he wanted to make sure Odom got recognized not only for her military service but also for her community involvement.

"What happened was that I had just come off of active duty," Odom said. "A young man said to me, 'You look good in that uniform, so why don't you apply for this job to be a recruiter.'"

Her application wasn't well received by the interviewer, however.

"This person said to me, 'We don't have women doing that job. You should be home having babies.'"

"I said, 'Listen, I am the best you will ever have,'" Odom continued. "They took the chance on me. Every month, I got trophies, awards and everything. They realized I was the best piece of candy. The point is to do the best you can do, because you never know where it will take you."

Odom and co-chair Barbara

Hamilton have been working with the ERNA on traffic calming measures on the Hyde Park-Mattapan border.

"We have, I think, five Slow Streets initiatives on the Hyde Park-Mattapan line," Walsh said, noting the City's plans for raised crosswalks and speed bumps. "We want to get ahead of tragedies before they happen, like a kid getting hit on a bicycle or a person getting hit in a crosswalk."

The main topic of discussion was the application for a 15-unit, multi-family apartment building to be erected at 64 Poydras St. on a lot where a single-family house now stands. The application was going before the Board of Appeals (ZBA) the following morning. The property is located near the Match Charter Public School, at 100 Poydras St.

It would require several variances, because the front and rear yard are insufficient; the lot area for additional dwelling units is insufficient; and the usable open space is insufficient.

"We've received, I'll say, overwhelming opposition to the housing," Apperwhite said. He noted that the Bel Nel Village Neighborhood Association was opposed to the project, and McCarthy's office received a call from Congresswoman Ayanna Pressley's office.

"No one is opposed to the actual housing itself," added his colleague in McCarthy's office, Maria Esdale Farrell, who is also running to succeed McCarthy as District Five City Councilor. "It's the volume of the traffic that has not been resolved since the school came in."

Bryan Flynn, Hyde Park liaison for the Mayor's Office of Neighborhood Service, said that he is going to ask for a deferment so that ERNA and the Bel Nel Village Association can have input on the matter.

"I've been doing this for two and a half years, and Bel Nel kind of came out of the woodwork," Flynn said, noting he got an email the night before the ERNA meeting. "They said they don't want this, so I'm going to defer this so we can take another look at this."

Also, several District Five candidates presented their platforms to the group, including Esdale Farrell, Cecily Graham, Alkia Powell and Mimi Turchinetz. Esdale Farrell stressed the importance of reforming the education system and quality of life. Graham, a grassroots organizer and aide to former Councilor At-Large and current Congresswoman Ayanna Pressley, stressed her background in public service. Powell wants to work toward "safer streets, fair housing and pay equity." Turchinetz emphasized her involvement in working for affordable housing and having the district knitted together.

Marty Keogh was the only At-Large candidate to speak. He thanked his friend, Sherman Brown, who attends the meetings, for encouraging him to redirect his life, get his GED and eventually go on to law school.

"He has no idea that, other than my family, that he was the biggest influence in my life," he said.

The preliminary election will be held on Tuesday, September 24.
