Squares + Streets zoning process severely questioned

In a Hyde Park meeting held on Jan. 8, a group from the Boston Planning & Development Agency (BPDA) – led by Chief of Planning James Arthur Jemison and Director of Planning Aimee Chambers – attempted to secure buy-in from local residents over the ongoing Squares + Streets (S+S) zoning reform process while running up against serious reservations regarding community engagement.

The mid-afternoon meeting had been envisioned by the BPDA as a small group (only eight people had been invited to attend) preview of what would be Mayor Wu's State of the City announcement that Hyde Park's Cleary Square, as well as Roslindale Square, would be the first locations selected for the new initiative.

Instead, the five-person group was met by a full room of more than 30 concerned and suspicious residents, many of whom had substantive questions about the review and approval process for the zoning amendment that Squares + Streets hinges on.

As the BPDA pursues a key part of the mayor's platform to reform the city's zoning code and respond to dire shortage of affordable – or any – housing, it faces entrenched distrust from communities. Anxiety is high among some in Hyde Park over whether the zoning changes will really be “consensus-based,” as the agency has promised.

Many large scale projects have been proposed for the Cleary Square area that do not conform to its zoning code – Article 69. Consequently, developers have routinely applied for – and received – variances from the ZBA, a process the City has called a “key factor driving what makes it difficult to improve or build housing in Cleary Square,” according to the BPDA's Squares + Streets Cleary Square Plan Primer (<http://tinyurl.com/wt27x9bp>).

By aiming to eliminate future projects' need for variances through the Squares + Streets rezoning, the City hopes to accelerate the development process, which Jemison explicitly stated during an earlier meeting held in Roslindale that day. Many times, variances have led to neighborhood opposition and further delay to projects, as well as lawsuits against the decision to approve said variances.

The zoning reform is focused on neighborhood centers and would entail the creation of six new districts that – when one or more of them are selected for Cleary and Roslindale squares in six-to-nine-months – would overlay the existing zoning codes for those areas.

The BPDA began working on this in September, and released the draft of the zoning text amendment for public review and comment on Dec. 5. The 118-page technical document is a work in progress, and is tentatively scheduled to go before the BPDA Board for approval in February, and then on to the Zoning Board of Appeal (ZBA) in March.

The BPDA will then begin a community engagement process to determine exactly what new S+S zoning district(s) will be mapped and enacted for the two neighborhoods.

The very first question of the hour-and-a-half meeting concerned the order of the process, and the fact that the amendment will be brought to the ZBA for approval before – rather than after – any significant community engagement takes place regarding what the six new zones will look like. Neither Jemison nor Chambers gave a clear answer as to why that is the case, instead reiterating that none of the approved zoning districts will go into effect until after the six-to-nine-month community process, at which time the districts' mapping will be approved.

“It's something we're putting into the code so that, as we go through the planning process, we can circle back to you so that we can have some conversation about what is most appropriate to be mapped at the end of the planning process,” Chambers said.

Jemison added that, with the new zones in the code, “we're creating a situation where people can choose from a wide range of choices and make a series of customizations from there,” and that it made sense to the BPDA to start that process with their approval.

“Think about it like a multiple-choice test,” he said.

Scott Batey, president of the Hyde Park Board of Trade, expressed concern with the compressed community review process for the zoning amendment; the comment period began on Dec. 5 and ends on Jan. 28, with the final community meeting scheduled for Feb. 6.

He also asked about what sort of formal community representation there would be during the planning and engagement process for the rezoning of the square.

Contrasting S+S to the Article 69 drafting process, Batey noted that, from 2009-2011, a board of 13 community members appointed by Mayor Menino had worked with the City to write the new zoning code, and that it “was probably one of the most conten-

New year, new housing in Stonybrook

Richard Heath
Staff Reporter

The new year commenced for the bi-monthly Stonybrook Neighborhood Association (SNA) meeting on Jan. 8 with old and new housing developments on the agenda.

Apparently taking a cue from Omer Hecht's plan for two housing units over his one-story camera shop, Bill Gao proposed to do the same at JP Kitchen Chinese restaurant on the same block at 3510 Washington St.

The architect is Timothy Burke, who also designed Hecht's two-story addition. He said Hecht's plans “should start pretty soon.”

“It's gone through Boston Planning and Development (BPDA) design review.” Hecht received Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) approval on June 7, 2022, with the proviso of BPDA design review with more attention to the entrance.

Burke said Gao's addition is similar to Hecht's and is “typical for the neighborhood.”

“It's a great use of the property.”

Burke said there had been an abutters meeting in the fall. The two-story addition is essentially a square, flat-roof box with narrow projecting bays and picture windows. Both apartments are duplexes with one facing Washington Street and Unit B facing Meehan Street; both will have two bedrooms and two baths. There will be no roof deck but will have small

Harvard looking to update Allston master plan

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) held a joint meeting with representatives from Harvard University on Jan. 16 in a virtual setting to start the process of updating its Institutional Master Plan (IMP).

The IMP covers most of the university's property in Lower Allston, though this particular plan does not include all of Harvard's development in the area, most notably the Enterprise Research Campus (ERC) just south of Western Avenue, which is not an "institutional" effort.

The updated plan encompasses six projects, three from the previous plan not yet completed and three new ones. The three previous projects include the Harvard Business School Faculty and Administrative Office Building, the 300,000-square-foot mixed-use Gateway Project, and the Harvard Stadium Renovation and Addition.

The new projects are more focused on students and athletics, the largest of which being a new tennis and squash racquet center. The next largest is the Mignone Field Support Building, just to the east of the racquet center, and the last being Crimson Catering, at the current location of Swissbakers, located at 168 Western Ave., and Harvard representatives said the two uses would be co-located since they are somewhat complementary.

Harvard Director of Government and Community Relations Mark Handley said the expectation is for the planning process to take place over the next year and end around December, 2024, with a BPDA Board vote taken on the results. He said much of the community discussion will focus around community benefits for the area.

Handley said they are expected to submit the IMP notification form to the BPDA this month to kick start the actual process. There will be a comment period on the initial filing, and then they will seek an IMP scoping determination. The plan is to file the actual IMP between March and August, with community meetings going on at that point, and then there will be another comment period on the actual IMP itself from September to November.

The biggest changes to the IMP from the previously approved version will be the exclusion of the Greenway, which starts at Rena Park and Raymond V.

Mellone Park (the parks behind the Honan-Allston Branch of the Boston Public Library) and goes northeasterly toward Western Avenue.

Handley said this exclusion is because the parks have been placed under the jurisdiction of the City of Boston, with a proviso that they stay parkland.

"This would not affect the Greenway's status as a publicly-accessible greenspace," said Harvard Director of Planning Services Alexandra Offiong.

The other two changes are to include the area around Swissbakers on Western Avenue, for Crimson Catering, and a site just southeast of the ERC set for electrical utility use.

Handley spoke about the community benefits process, and while he did not go into specifics — there

Residents claim car business is using street

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The East River Neighborhood Association (ERNA) met and discussed parking issues on both Birchcroft Road and Reddy Avenue.

On Birchcroft Road, residents said they are concerned that one of their neighbors is using the public parking – and their driveway parking – to house cars for a used car business. State Rep. Rob Consalvo said they need to talk to the Inspectional Services Department (ISD) to get the remedy for that.

“Your neighborhood is zoned residential and that would be a violation of the Boston Zoning Code to operate a business in a residential zone,” Consalvo said.

“Now I complained about this for 160-something days, I called the police, 311, the Boston Transportation Department (BTD) everyone,” said member Patricia Odom.

“If it’s someone running a business out of a residential zone, an ISD inspector will come out and write a ticket for that, and if they can prove there’s a business being run there, they can write a violation – I think it’s three violations and they might not respond to the first two – and after the third violation, they will take them to court and a judge will issue a remedy,” he said. “That’s one of two things, either they have to discontinue the use, or legalize the use, which means they would fill out an application with ISD and go to the Zoning Board of Appeals and everyone would oppose it and it would likely get denied.”

But the key is that it must be proved that business is going on there. Boston Police Department (BPD) District E-18 Community Service Officer Paul Broderick said when officers have gone to the address, the seven or eight cars there are all registered to a person, not a business.

“They’re not registered to a business, they’re registered to a person at that address, and if they’re illegally parked, they’ll get a ticket,” he said. “But if they’re just parked there, there’s nothing we can do about it at that point.”

“They have to catch them operating a business illegally,” Consalvo agreed.

But ERNA Chair Barbara Hamilton insisted that this was a business, and said the owner has been in the ERNA meetings before referencing their business.

“He came on to say he sells cars,” she said.

Consalvo said he wants the neighborhood to speak with newly-elected District 5 City Councilor Enrique Pepén to coordinate on this issue.

“We’d love to pull the councilor in, because it’s a city issue, but I’m happy to work with him and our building inspector, because at the end of the day if the selling of cars is driving the parking issue, then we need to get the building inspector to write the violation,” he said. “If they have to take him to court they’ll take him to court.”

In other news, resident James Sanon gave an update on Reddy tious processes that this community ever went through.”

The worry, expressed by Batey and others at the meeting, is that the BPDA’s engagement with the community will be inadequate or ineffective, in terms of reflecting and implementing its wants and needs regarding development in Cleary Square.

In response, Jemison first stated that the scope of S+S is much narrower than rezoning the entire neighborhood, and that – during the planning and engagement process – the community would have opportunities to share their opinions and reach consensus. He went on to say that the BPDA would not allow, through zoning, any harm to come to the historic nature of the district. However, he also stated that “there are places where some height could be accommodated in the interest of helping the city grow.”

Batey continued to press for an answer on formal representation.

“If that’s something that the community thinks is the right approach to take, I think we’re very open to it,” Jemison began. He did, however, cite his experiences with impact advisory groups – and members’ ideas becoming “embedded in the way that they work” – as a point of concern regarding the potential establishment of a community board. “So I guess I’d say I’m quite open to it if it ends up being the right approach. But we have not started this process with a determination that we’re definitely going to do it or not do it.”

On the other hand, several participants of the meeting, including resident Marilynne Quarcoo, emphasized that the former Article 69 process was not nearly as inclusive as it could have been. Despite being longtime and engaged residents, Quarcoo and other residents said they had never heard of the advisory board formed to represent Hyde Park residents, or been able to participate.

When asked later in the meeting how, specifically, BPDA/Community decisions would be made regarding zoning, Jemison did not go into much detail beyond the community meeting process, during which people would be able to express their opinions regarding potential new zoning districts for the Square. “I think that’s something we’re going to have to assess together,” he concluded. “My goal is to try to have some consensus.”

Chambers then described the process as iterative, taking into consideration the many people involved. “Sometimes unanimous consensus is difficult,” she said. “You have to think about what the give and take is. You know, we’ve been having conversations about that, and we’re trying to figure out what makes the most sense for... the collective.”

District 5 City Councilor Enrique Pepén was also present, and commented on what he had heard. “The meeting today is important because it has alleviated some anxiety of mine,” he said of BPDA’s responses to the many questions asked. “It has alleviated the anxiety of a lot of people because we needed this clarification in the district.”

Yet the anxieties of more than a few in the room had not been alleviated.

“What I’m hearing is, we didn’t involve you then... but trust us now,” Hyde Park Neighborhood Association (HPNA) Secretary Elaine Coveney said – earlier in the meeting – of the BPDA’s handling of the zoning reform. “We’ll change the zoning code, and we promise we’ll bring you in. And the BRA, I’m sorry, has not had a great track record, over the years, involving the community, so I’m a little concerned about that.”

Jemison responded by repeating several times that no zoning change would come to Cleary Square until after the community engagement process, and Chambers followed him by citing the BPDA’s ongoing outreach regarding the initiative, and discussed its previous and ongoing outreach initiatives, including the pop-up office hours the BPDA has been hosting across the city.

“With all due respect, the pop-up events have struck me more as marketing events than anything else,” Coveney came back. “At the Dec. 5 Zoom meeting a lot of substantive questions were asked and not answered,” she said of the meeting held at the start of the comment period. “So again, I just am a little concerned about this coming top down. I mean, I really think that the process that created Article 69 was a better model.”

BMW M2 Coupe

The BMW M2 coupe for 2023 is powered by a twin power, 3.0 liter inline 6 via an 8-speed automatic (6-speed manual available). BMW built this car with the U.S. in mind. This is a rear drive sports coupe that’s loaded with driver options that are standard equipment. The M package makes this car a real driving machine. I was the last person to get the car before it goes into storage for the winter. The performance summer tires get hard and do not like cold weather, not to mention snow. The ride is surprisingly very good, power is over the top at any speed. The base price starts at $62,200 (destination $995). Now comes some options, including the remote start, carbon fiber, adaptive LED, BMW 50 year emblems, live cockpit pro with HUD, and the Brooklyn Grey paint brings the total MSRP to $76,895. There is nothing not to like about this car except winter driving. Yes, you could put four snow tires on, but I would feel guilty driving this car on salt covered roads. During my week loan it sat under cover because we got snow that week. This is a great coupe and after a two hour drive, we both out feeling refreshed.

Mayor Wu hasn't gone far enough

Again. Yes, children in Boston's Catholic (and other private) schools are being given the short end of the stick again — actually no part of the stick — as they have previously been given in the new admission formula to the exam schools.

In her recent State of the City address the Mayor delighted in telling an endearing story of how her mother took her as a little girl to a Chicago art museum on a Tuesday because there was free admission on that day and money was tight in her family.

This segued into Wu's announcement that, beginning in February, all BPS students and their families will receive free admission to a number of local venues on the first and second Sundays of the month; these include the Museum of Fine Arts, the Institute of Contemporary Art, the Museum of Science, the Boston Children's Museum, the New England Aquarium, and the Franklin Park Zoo.

[Currently all city residents can gain free admission for up to 4 people at these and other sites by contacting the Boston Public Library; the Children's Museum down by South Station refuses to grant free admittance—they knock half off the admission price.]

The Mayor declines to realize that the many city kids in parochial and other private schools would also relish the free admittance on the first and second Sundays. It seems that Her Honor could have put pressure on these large institutions to include children from families who go to great lengths to ensure

of Town/

that their offspring get a superior education, better and safer than that provided by many public schools. With many barely eking by rather than moving out of the city, their parents sacrifice much to come up with the tuition. In fact, it is their taxes that provide the basis for many of the city services. Moreover, by not sending their children to BPS, they save the city about $25,000 for each child they educate elsewhere.

I realize that when you gave each Boston Public School enough air conditioners for each classroom to make learning in September and June more pleasant, you could not do that for the struggling city's private schools, but this you can do.

The institutions providing the free admittance do not have to pay any city taxes; if they want to, they can make in-lieu-of payments, as much and as small as they want to. But the parents and guardians of children in parochial and private schools have no such option.

THRILLED WITH FRANKLIN PARK INVESTMENTS

To the Editor:

The Franklin Park Coalition is thrilled to celebrate Mayor Wu's significant new investments in the park in her State of the City speech. Following the release of the Franklin Park Action Plan last winter, the Coalition advocated for implementation of recommendations to improve maintenance and management of the park, especially the long-neglected woodlands that comprise almost half of the park's 500 acres.

In the Mayor's words: "Franklin Park is more than a home for Boston's next generation of champions: For my family and many others, there is no more magical place in the city, with its historic stone bridges; wooded trails; and beloved community spaces. But our biggest park has suffered from decades of disinvestment. This year, we will act on recommendations from the Franklin Park Coalition and community members to begin restoring Franklin Park to its fullest potential. We will hire a park administrator and six new maintenance staff, bringing dedicated park staffing to the highest level in over 50 years. And we will begin the community process to reimagine and invest in a home for the Elma Lewis Playhouse."

Kudos to our green Mayor and her dedicated Parks Department staff for recognizing the importance of Franklin Park to the surrounding neighborhoods - as a resource for health, climate resilience, and building stronger communities. And thank you to the hundreds of park users who participated in Action Plan meetings offering input on their vision for Franklin Park. This is truly a time to celebrate!

ROLL OUT THE SQUARES + STREETS INITIATIVE ASAP

To the Editor:

I have attended three excellent presentations by BPDA staff of the planned Squares + Streets initiative. They are doing an excellent job of socializing and explaining this sensible reform of the building permitting process. We need to expedite adding more housing in Boston because the shortage is not only hurting residents but also threatening the economy.

In 1993, I was fortunate to be able to buy a house Roslindale, which was struggling to have a viable commercial district. I am eager to share this now splendid community with more people who will find homes in the dwellings that will be erected above the existing single-story commercial properties. The urgency of this reform is underscored by the fact that we 72 million baby boomers - who are living longer in their dwellings than the previous generation - have done too little to provide housing for our 76 million children let alone the millions of immigrants who have brought great benefits to our country. There is only one truly effective solution to the housing crisis - build more as soon as possible.

is no plan currently, as the community process would have to be completed first - he highlighted the general aspects they're looking to replicate from the 2013 IMP. Those include benefits for education, for the public realm, for grants and for housing. He said they will be meeting with residents throughout the period mentioned above, along with the Harvard Allston Task Force (HATF).

A good deal of the conversation with residents centered around Harvard's other development projects in the area, like the ERC and much of what it has been proposing for Barry's Corner (the intersection of N. Harvard Avenue and Western Avenue). Handley and BPDA Project Manager Quinn Valcich said they can have those conversations during other meetings not specifically focused on the IMP.

"But we recognize there is a role for that type of conversation within a broader IMP discussion on activation across the IMP site," said Valcich.

Resident Barbara Jaehn asked what would hold Harvard to these plans. Handley pointed out that anything beyond the scope of what is approved by the BPDA would be a violation of the zoning, which would be enforced by the Inspectional Services Department (ISD).

Charlesview Executive Director Jo-Ann Barbour had two questions, focused on the Greenway and affordable housing. She asked if either could be expanded through the IMP process. Handley said the Greenway construction process includes about 10 acres and a half-mile of greenspace.

"There's always the potential for adjustments to it, but at this point our intention is to stick with what's documented for the Greenway," he said of the proposed park.

Barbour asked specifically about land donations for affordable housing. Handley said they have been working to create affordable housing in general and specifically pointed to 65 Seattle St. that it has recently donated.

"We didn't come ready tonight to talk about what's next, but housing creation, homeownership and affordability is one of the biggest areas of our benefits approach," he said.

Resident Ali Iaria asked about language access and public advertising for this process. Valcich said the master plan process at the BPDA does not have requirements for different languages, but said Harvard could take a page from the Article 80 process, which requires different languages and translators if the population of speakers of particular languages near proposed projects reaches a certain threshold. Handley said they would be open to it.

Avenue's issues with parking on the sidewalk and residents having to walk on the street to get to Ross Field. He said several nearby institutional, church and business patrons end up parking there on the sidewalk, which is the same level as the road. He said the city needs to come and create a safer entrance to Ross, as it is used heavily by the neighborhood children.

"I requested if the street could be repaved and if we could have raised sidewalks, just like every other street in the neighborhood," he said. "Reddy Avenue, I'm not sure why it's in such disrepair, and I'm hoping something can be done. I did have communication with city officials years ago, and I was told there were plans to have Reddy Avenue reconstructed or these issues addressed."

Sanon said the plans had construction set for April 2023, and it hasn't happened. Consalvo said again, residents should reach out to Pepén to get the street on the city's capital plan and it will eventually get repaved.

"Because there are thousands of streets in the city that need to be repaved," he said.

needed to serve Dorchester and Hyde Park as the current ones are reaching capacity. With a large crowd in attendance and many questions, Eversource agreed to return with more project details about the process and parameters. The Jan. 11 presentation took up the majority of the two-hour meeting, with concerns raised about safety, benefits to the community, and construction specifics.

Rick Yoder, MHC co-chair, provided background on battery systems that have failed in the recent past. In 2019 there were battery units overheated at an energy storage facility in Arizona resulting in injuries to eight firefighters and a police officer. In 2023, in Provincetown, MA, there was a malfunction of a BESS that had been installed in 2022 when it was taken offline for maintenance.

“This is what we’re dealing with. We want it to be as safe as can be,” said Yoder referring to any BESS installed in the area.

“Your neighborhood is first,” said Meredith Boericke, project manager for project services for Eversource as she reviewed the plan. The new battery’s location and substation must be near one or both of the existing substations in Hyde Park and Dorchester. One possible location for both the BESS and substation installation is an 18-acre site off Cummins Highway on land already owned by Eversource behind the Stop and Shop Plaza. The new substation location could also go to an empty location identified on New England Avenue.

Eversource is working on options regarding site beautification requested at the previous meeting to improve the aesthetics of the existing substation on Cummins Highway. As a capped landfill, more vegetation there is prohibited.

“So, our thought is prior to us owning it, it was not maintained properly to the DEP standards. That is part of our condition of owning it. I did get this information just today,” said Boericke.

She has added Victoria Heights to the map as an abutting area. A site walk will be scheduled for spring. The BESS installation set for the Cummins plot is a four-year project with construction slated for 2025-2026. The BESS needs to be located within a half-mile of the Hyde Park substation. The new substation construction would be an eight-year process, 2024 - 2031.

“We’ve been basically pioneers in our ability to manage storage systems. This is going to be a containerized situation,” said George Popovici, Eversource Senior Safety Engineer, as he walked through the four levels of safety features. Stored in containers on a concrete pad, the batteries shutdown if anything abnormal occurs; each individual battery cell is wrapped in a fire-extinguishing blanket; if an alarm is sounded, the fire suppression system is activated; and if the container becomes over-pressurized, pre-engineered safety panels release. The BESS will also be monitored off-site at the station in Dorchester.

“One of the things we heard was to put our commitment to this association in writing and we’re happy to do that,” said Boericke as she outlined community benefits. “What we would suggest is that we start with a letter of intent. This is a four-year process...we would recommend entering into that letter of intent with Eversource now, so you have what you’ll be able to follow through on commitments.” Boericke said that a dollar figure percentage will be set on the project cost that would return back to the community.

“We are really involving the neighborhoods upfront and early on,” said Boericke. A substation site evaluation slide was displayed with 23 criteria ranging from land, surroundings, environment distribution system, construction, site layout, and transmission considerations. It is hoped that a location can be chosen by March 2024.

“Are we going to be able to get into our homes safely?” asked an abutter to the BESS location from the Victoria Heights Condominiums regarding the construction process. A lengthy discussion ensued about each stage of construction and its possible disruptions.

“What’s the environmental impact for the Cummins site and what’s the environmental impact on the New England site?” asked MHC co-chair Lisa Beatman. This would be determined by an environmental study. “We know we have to apply for an environmental permit,” said Boericke. Any plan will be discarded if not permitted.

Under other agenda items Paul Broderick, BPD Community Service Officer reported overall crime for District 18 was down 10 percent over last year at this time. “The police report for the area is pretty quiet,” he said. Other news included the departure of Dianna Bronchuk, Roslindale Liaison, Mayor’s Office of Neighborhood Services. She will become Chief of Staff for Councilor Enrique Pepén. A successor has not yet been identified.

Gao said he owns the building but not the restaurant, which he said is owned by family members.

Alcurtis Clark, from Gartland Street, said she did not like the colors on the schematic screenshare.

Gao said he was “happy” to change the colors and was planning to upgrade the first floor entry.

Tulin Dadilli chaired the meeting.

“You’ll hear from us about next steps,” she said after Burke concluded.

At the end of the meeting Dadilli added, “We will ask the developer to come back in two months for a vote.”

The proposal for 84 Stonley Road was described by the developers’ consultant Jay Walsh as “rebirth of a project.” The one-story, 50-by-80-foot building was formerly a sound stage and recording studio that Patrick Moloney and Colm O’Shea bought early in 2017.

They hired Scales Architects of Jamaica Plain to retrofit the metal building with nine apartments and they gave a presentation to the SNA on Oct. 16, 2017. Seemingly unprepared, Moloney and O’Shea came back to SNA with a different architect and new plans on Jan. 11, 2018.

Facing opposition, they dropped their project after a Jan. 14, 2019 SNA meeting.

“We’re dissatisfied with the process,” they said. “Things keep going on; we’re worn out by debate.”

Apparently rested, O’Shea and Moloney came back to the SNA on Jan. 8 with a newer, bigger plan by their architect Lucio Trabucco.

The development team, with partner Sean Morrissey, have apparently put on hold their proposed three-story self-storage building at 75 Stedman at the rear of 84 Stonley.

First proposed to SNA in May 2021, the partners filed a Letter of Intent with the BPDA on Nov. 4, 2021 and hit SNA opposition. For 84 Stonley, Moloney and O’Shea came back with a three-story, 18-small-unit apartment building that Trabucco said will fit into the existing building; six units on each floor and a ground-floor garage for four cars.

The building is a long, square box with three projecting bays; the garage entry is at the far corner.

Jennifer Urhrane commented that this was the third building in the block by the same architect.

“He [Trabucco] did 76 Stonley and 50 Stedman,” she said. “The same design and color are really depressing. We have another big grey box.”

What followed was less about the building and more about trends that some felt were happening in the Stonybrook area. Caliga, from Burnett Street, started it off.

“I just have to say again that this part of JP can no longer have development,” she said. “Ten Stonley is not done. Pine Street is not done. BMS paper has not broken ground.”

“You come along and throw down proposals. We are not the solution for the housing crisis in Boston,” Caliga said. “We are a lower income, funky part of JP with more ethnicity. It will be a traffic nightmare. That’s all I have to say.”

Fred Vetterlein opposed 84 Stonley in 2017 because he felt it was driving out light industry; but he apparently has changed his mind.

“We did not accept nine units [in 2017],” he said. “Now they’ve doubled the number, We can’t say no-no. The [housing] need is enormous. The rents are scary. We need more rentals.

“We should be responsible for more housing,” Vetterlein said. “This is a reasonable project. We have to think about more housing. Get this stuff built. Stop delaying it.”

First time caller and new Stonybrook neighbor Lisa Robinson Schoeller said she lives at the Vita, 3321 Washington St. She said she didn’t like the design, but more than that, “This one will ruin the whole feel of the neighborhood,” she said. “You’re turning JP into a [housing] project. Thousands of affordable units. More than we can handle.

“It’s not Jamaica Plain’s responsibility to solve the housing problem for the whole city,” Schoeller said.

Jon McCurdy had a more prosaic concern: he wanted to minimize the glass windows. “Over the front entrance, the tall windows, it puts light spillage on the street.” he said. “Can you minimize that? Can you minimize light spillage on the street?”

Last year McCurdy, who says he is an advocate for dark skies, unsuccessfully complained to the developer of the newly built 99-100 Williams St. about the bright lights on the veranda allegedly shining on neighbors.

According to Walsh in a message to The Bulletin the next day, Moloney and O’Shea will file a Small Project Review with the BPDA at the end of January.

Dinelli said that the developers would be asked to “come back to answer our suggestions.”

“The larger public process has not been set,” she said. “There’s a whole lot more review. Then we can ask them back and ask for a vote.”

The next SNA meeting is March 11.

Miracle Prayer
 Dear Heart of Jesus, in the past I have asked You for many favours. This time, I ask you this very special one (mention favour). Take it, dear Heart of Jesus, and place it within Your own broken heart where Your Father sees it. Then, in His merciful eyes, it will become Your favour, not mine. Amen. Say for three days, promise publication and favour will be granted.
