Elliana Arielle Grace Chery confidently strode into the Hyde Park branch library on the afternoon of Saturday, January 12, knowing that she was the woman of the hour. The artist was about to attend her first solo exhibition of her work, escorted by her parents and her best friend, Angeline Dennis.

“I am ready to talk about my paintings now,” she said with a broad smile, holding a doll in one arm.

Boston City Council considers speed cameras

City Council President and District 4 City Councilor Andrea Campbell called for a hearing at last week’s Council meeting to discuss the possibility of creating a new traffic unit inside the Boston Police Department (BPD) and possibly installing speed and traffic signal cameras in the city.

The order came about from a conversation she said she had last year regarding the safety of city streets in Boston.

“These are issues that every neighborhood in the City of Boston shares which are speeding cars, traffic congestion, fear for your life when either crossing the street, driving down the street, or riding your bike, you name it,” she said. “It’s probably at the top of the list with respect to constituent cases we get in our offices.”

Campbell said this is a logical progression in the city’s efforts to make the streets safer, like Slow Streets, Vision Zero and 2017’s reduction of the city’s speed limit.

“But we all know if you change the speed limit and you don’t have any enforcement, then it is useless,” she said.

Campbell said at last year’s meeting, she spoke with residents and police officers on the idea. Police want to show up not just to solve crimes. They also want to show up for traffic concerns. They want to do enforcement, but they don’t think they have enough resources to do so as quickly as residents would like,” she said. “So out of this meeting with (Boston Transportation Department [BTD]) Commissioner Gina Fiandaca, Chief of Streets Chris Osgood, Slow Streets, Vision Zero, many folks in the

The developer for 11 Dana Ave., Milan Patel, has filed with the Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) for the proposed 24-unit building in Hyde Park.

The BPDA has scheduled a community meeting at the Boston Police Department District E-18 Station at 1249 Hyde Park Ave. on January 23rd, at 6:30 p.m.

The proposal would remove an existing three-family home and put in a 24-unit, four-story building with 24 parking spaces below-grade using a mechanical stacking system. The proposal also will provide 39 bicycle spots provided in the basement. All of the proposed units would be two bedroom units and the site would include a 300-square foot commercial space on the ground level. Three of the floors will contain eight units a piece, which are all currently proposed at market rate prices and, since it apparently does not need any variances, will not have any affordable units as per the city’s Inclusionary Development Policy (IDP). The filing does not state whether the units would be home ownership units or rentals. The total development cost has been slated for $9 million.

According to the developer’s Letter of Intent, the building would not require any zoning variances and would be built as-of-right in the area under the Article 69 Hyde Park Neighborhood Shopping District 2. The proposed project benefits would include, according to the developer, new housing units, which Boston Mayor Marty Walsh has designated as a priority in trying to create 185,000 (formally 53,000) by 2030. The proposal also states it will enrich the site by updating the current use and

New year, new condominiums on Brookside Avenue

Richard Heath
 Staff Reporter

With the New Year comes a new condominium development in Jamaica Plain, this one proposed by Scott Johnson for 121 Brookside Avenue, around the corner from the Green St station. Johnson, of Cedar Hill Design and Development, filed a Small Project Review PNF with the BPDA on January 4 for a four story, 21-unit condominium building designed by Cheryl Tougias.

The BPDA is hosting a community meeting about the development on Wednesday, January 23, at 6:30pm at Brookside Community Health Center.

121 Brookside will replace a fenced in truck parking lot behind Pony Express Moving and add to the march of upscale residential housing in this fading light industrial end of Brookside Avenue.

It will also book-end a nine unit condominium building directly opposite that Cedar Hill is building at 118 Brookside, also designed by Tougias; the foundation is being excavated this month.

The 121 Brookside condominiums are being built on two lots acquired from City Realty. In May 2016, City Realty bought four lots between Amory St and Brookside Ave. from Raymond Obin for $2.75 million. About a year later, Cedar Hill bought lots A and B facing Brookside Ave. City Realty was criticized at the time for land banking and selling off parcels to third parties.

Cedar Hill showed preliminary plans to the Brookside Neighborhood Association in the spring of 2018; these showed eight residential units in a four-story building with one live/work ground floor space, skirting the city's affordable housing requirement.

Apparently getting pushback from Brookside N/A on this issue, Cedar Hill returned to the neighborhood on July 25 with new plans: a four story, 21-unit condominium building of smaller units, seven to a floor; two larger, live-work artist spaces on the ground floor with separate entrances, and two other up-stairs affordable units. The Small Project PNF goes to great lengths to comply with Plan JP/Rox.

"The Project site is located within Plan JP/Rox. Between 2014 and 2030, 105,000 new residents will populate Boston... to help house these and to insure no displacement, more housing must be created. The Plan JP/Rox was formulated to provide guidance for best practices in making suggestions for zoning changes... The highest and best use of the ad is residential..."

Cedar Hill maintains that 121 Brookside is planned to work within the Plan JP/Rox guidelines in six ways: using the density bonus, the building will rise 45 feet; the affordability percentage is 17%, above the required 13%; two of the largest units will be for artist live-work; the sidewalks will be wider with street trees; the building will have a set-back between the 3rd and 4th floors and 11 parking spaces will be on site.

Tougias has designed a square box building with projecting bays that try to relate to the neighboring buildings in massing, scale, articulation and the use of masonry on the façade; other façade materials will be the familiar cement board and metal paneling.

According to the Brookside Neighborhood Association, Cedar Hill changed its plan to a mixed use with smaller units to attract a younger, less affluent buyer who would enjoy the light industrial character of the neighborhood, minutes from Green St station.

The PNF states that Cedar Hill met with the Brookside N/A three times and that the group voted to support the project.

According to Scott Shear of Brookside N/A, Johnson did meet with the group three times; Shear has a different conclusion.

"On two occasions we rejected the plan," Shear told the Bulletin, "because it did not meet the requirements of PlanJP/Rox on design and affordability. At the last meeting we voted to support the project pending confirmation of his claim that 121 Brookside will have four affordable units."

Another member of Brookside N/A said it would prefer deeper affordability at 50% area median income.

The public comment period is open until February 4.

CELEBRATION FOR A CAUSE

Add Martin Luther King Jr. Day to one of those holidays that too often fly under the radar. Most, but not all, will have the upcoming observance as a day off. They will no doubt appreciate the chance to stay home given weather reports claiming frigid temperatures and potential snow.

Beyond that, however, there is arguably not enough active awareness about the federal holiday and the man it honors. Like other days on the calendar (Veterans Day, sadly, also comes to mind) it is a remembrance that inspires far too little memory.

This is not to say by any means that the day is ignored. As it should, the day is celebrated with particular vigor in our more diverse neighborhoods.

Nationally, there is a campaign known as “day on, not a day off,” a celebration of the annual MLK -inspired “day of service.” The observance is intended to empower individuals, strengthen communities, bridge barriers, create solutions to social problems, and move us closer to King’s vision of a “beloved community.” Locally, since 2006, Boston Cares has organized MLK Day projects. It will organize 600 volunteers at the Boston Latin School to support local immigrants and refugees through the creation of English for Speakers of Other. Volunteers will also build beds for families who do not have a bed of their own.

Suffolk University will host a reception with Boston Police Commissioner William Gross. He will talk about his experience as the City’s first African American commissioner and “how his work supports the continued dream of racial equity and collective liberation that Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr spoke about during the March on Washington in 1963 in his ‘I Have a Dream’ speech.”

There will also be art, music, and dance performances at Jordan Hall, the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, the Museum of Fine Arts, the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library and Museum, and other venues.

In Norwood, an annual celebration at First Congregational Church on Winter Street features free activities for all ages and backgrounds. In past years, volunteers have organized drives for clothes and toiletries, made birthday cards for seniors and donated homemade items for children at Newton Wellesley Hospital.

Sure, there is a lot going on to commemorate the life of the slain civil rights leader. Our concern is whether lessons from his all-too-short life are yet absorbed into our everyday lives and culture.

Let’s be honest, racism is still an epidemic, as is sexism and other forms of institutionalized prejudice. Heck, there was even a member of Congress recently admonished for being oblivious to the fact that many would take issue with his boast of being a “white nationalist.” We fear that all these wonderful events on Monday are merely preaching to the converted. We can’t shake the sickening feeling that this country is moving backwards when it comes to civil rights, not forward. “Justice for all” is still not guaranteed and Dr. King’s famous dream is still not fully realized.

There is still a lot of work to do. That is why we all need, more than ever, to honor the man Monday’s holiday celebrates and reflect on the larger legacy he set in motion.

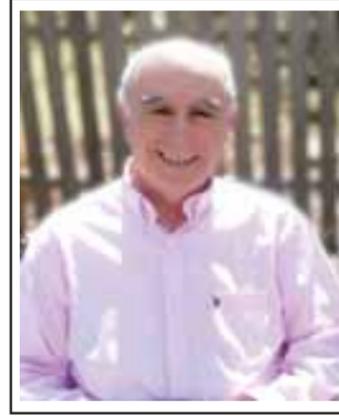

City to (some) seniors: Drop dead

Okay, the title of this piece is not original. It mimics the headline of a 1975 New York Daily News edition referencing President Gerald Ford’s denial of a request for federal help by New York City. The Big Apple needed a financial bailout as it never had before, because it was in such dire straits. Hence the memorable FORD TO CITY: DROP DEAD.

The title at the top speaks of the fact that may come (as it did to me recently) as a surprise to many seniors living in the city: there is no senior housing for us that is not income-based.

Yes, there is Susan Bailis assisted-living facilities in several sections of the city, but the distinguished rents reflect the assisted-living component.

Right now, if empty-nesters, as part of a down-sizing effort decide to sell their homes after paying off 30-year mortgages and their children have moved out, they have no place to rent alongside other seniors in their zip code, nay in the entire city as Elderly Services has informed me, to spend their remaining years before health issues set in and militate against living unassisted.

My Kind of Town/

True, there is senior citizen housing that is income-based, and I’m glad it is rather large (there is a significant waiting list). But for those of us who have been relatively blessed during our earning years with the education, eagerness, and good health to do hard work, as well as haleness of the part of our spouse/partner and children, there is no place for us to stay with other healthy seniors after the kids are grown and we sell the family house that has become too hard to maintain with taxes, heat, and normal repairs.

We, the middle class of firefighters, grocery store clerks, social workers, dental hygienists, and hair dressers, upon whose financial shoulders this city was built following the repurposing of the New York Central/Boston & Albany railyards in the Back Bay decades ago, have asked little from this city founded in 1630.

Primarily, we merely want our streets plowed and occasionally swept, want police and fire protection, want public schools to have enough desks and books, want playgrounds with swings and without dog feces, and want Inspectional Services to intervene to prevent our neighborhoods from falling into disrepair. Primarily these. And we also want to establish firm safety nets for the less fortunate. This is why we pay our

BPDA SHOULD GIVE BLESSING PROMPTLY

To the Editor:

I am writing (again) today to voice my continued support for the Roxbury Prep School project on Belgrade Avenue, particularly the new, scaled-down plan that they announced earlier this week. This new plan seems to meet the request of neighbors who oppose the school, in principle, and the city officials who said that the original design was too large.

Roxbury Prep listened to the community and the city council members and came up with a thoughtful redesign of the building and the site. This plan seems to meet some of the specific requests that came from the those who initially opposed the project. There is still a great amount of community support for the project and we couldn’t be happier with this current plan.

We hope that this will now move quickly through the BPDA process and they give it their blessings to move forward. We sincerely hope that Mayor Walsh and the Boston City Council will also support the new plan. After all, it is what they asked for.

As an abutter to this piece of property, I wholeheartedly support this new plan and hope to see this move forward. After all, what’s so wrong with building new schools in the city and supporting school kids and their collective futures?? Let this be part of a positive chapter in the growth of our fine city.

CRIMINALS COMES IN MANY FORMS

To the Editor:

How very sad that a neighboring Dedham Catholic parish has put baby Jesus in a cage topromote open borders, illegal immigration, and lawlessness. The teachings of several Boston Cardinals and the Universal Church have much more in common with President Donald Trump than with the angry social justice warriors who have effectively desecrated a church. In a sermon at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross to the VFW, a late Cardinal of Boston summed real Catholic teaching very well:

“Though shall love thy neighbor as thyself. The same law which calls us to love all, even enemies, binds us to love more intensely those who are nearer to us in kinship or in association. Hence, the love of our fellow citizens and of a civil society which they have organized for their common good-which society we call our country -is a derivative of the Divine law of charity itself.”

Further, Saint Thomas Aquinas made a philosophical study of immigration. Aquinas clearly reasoned in the Summa Theologica, “if foreigners were allowed to meddle with the affairs of a nation as soon as they settled down in its midst many dangers might occur, since the foreigners not yet having the common good firmly at heart might attempt something hurtful to the people.” The evil of 9/11 and the Boston Marathon Bombing bare out the wisdom of Aquinas. WRCIA reviews "Go Boston 2030" and school crossings

Ariane Komyati
Staff Reporter

The West Roxbury Civic Improvement Association (WRCIA) met on Jan. 14 to discuss traffic and pedestrian safety. The meeting room at St. Stephen's was packed with WRCIA members, as well as members from the Greater Belgrade Avenue Neighborhood Association and the Bellevue Hill Neighborhood Association. Chris Osgood, the City of Boston Chief of Streets, and Bill Conroy, a City of Boston Senior Transportation Planner, were also present at the meeting to discuss concerns with the neighbors.

Osgood discussed "Go Boston 2030", a "City of Boston initiative that envisions a bold transportation future for the City for the next five, 10, and 15 years." He explained that Boston's three big priorities are making the streets safer for people who walk and bike, moving people more reliably through the city, and better transportation.

The city administration plans to make the streets safer by looking into the possibility of speed humps, pushing legislation for hands-free cell phone use, and utilizing photo enforcement with school buses to ensure vehicles are not illegally driving around stopped buses. Osgood also discussed bringing the next generation of traffic signals to Boston, creating a transit team, and increasing the reach of the "Blue Bike" system.

Conroy reviewed plans to make the area around Washington St. safer. In the spring, Conroy said the city will install new stop signs on side roads off of Washington St., such as Woodley Ave. "We are also looking into drawing a yellow line down the middle of Woodley Ave. to create two lanes," he stated. Conroy also discussed concerns regarding Stimson St. Over the past three years, there have been six vehicle crashes on Stimson St. "The city will be looking into putting in more aggressive measures on Stimson," Conroy told members.

One member stated that the stop signs do very little to slow vehicles, and that many people just slow down to a rolling stop. "It's visual pollution to have a stop sign installed, only to have people go right through it," she remarked.

The West Roxbury Civic Improvement Association met on Monday, Jan. 14 to a packed room of residents wishing to discuss pedestrian safety.

COURTESY PHOTO

Another concern was the speeding and accidents occurring on Cornell St. in Roslindale. One resident stated he witnessed two car accidents on the street in one weekend. He has been trying to discuss the need for a stop sign in the area for over three years but has gotten very little help from the city. Conroy vowed to take a look into the issue.

The safety of children crossing the street while walking to school was another issue for members.

"The Beethoven is the only school in West Roxbury that faces a major street, and the cars speeding and running red lights are a major concern," explained one neighbor and mother. "These are very young kids. Why is there no police presence there in the morning?" Officer Roach explained that in August, before the start of the school year, the city of Boston chooses which four schools the police will cover in each town. In West Roxbury, the schools that the police cover are West Roxbury High School, Catholic Memorial, the Lyndon, and the Irving. Many parents are confused as to why high schools were chosen, and not the Beethoven, which serves kids from K1 to 2nd grade.

Neighborhood still not happy with 920 American Legion proposal

Residents still have a myriad of concerns regarding another relatively large project in East Roslindale.

The Mt. Hope Canterbury Neighborhood Association met on Jan. 10 to discuss a variety of issues, including 920 American Legion Highway and diversity and inclusion within the Boston Fire and Police Departments.

The hot topic of the MHC meeting was the continued discussion on City Realty's (CR) proposed six story 52-unit rental housing development on 920 American Legion Highway. Many residents of the neighborhood are still strongly opposed, despite City Realty scaling down the project and planning on not cutting down some of the trees on the lot.

Residents have multiple concerns about the project, including greenspace, flooding, traffic, and parking. "The original CR proposal would have removed all the mature trees along 200 feet of ALH right up to the sidewalk. Would such a proposal be made along the Jamaicaaway?" Questioned MHC co-leaders Rick Yoder and Lisa Beatman in a letter to the editor in the Jan. 3 Boston Bulletin. The public meetings with residents and CR convinced the developers to design a smaller footprint, but many neighbors are still concerned about greenspace. "This area is suburban-urban, it is one of the attractions of this town," stated one neighbor. "All this development is turning it completely urban."

For the six-story 52-unit project, City Realty is proposing 62 parking spaces and bike storage, which many residents feel is inadequate.

A major concern with the 920 American Legion Highway project is stormwater and flooding. Residents living across from ALH on Wilmot St. are at a lower elevation, and heavy rains dump water in a retaining pool in front of Wilmot. City Realty's new design will "hold the heaviest rainfall hitting the building's roof and direct it under the building into large storage vessels, then will release it slowly later," explained Yoder. Many neighbors are not convinced with CR's plans to combat the flooding problem. "City Realty is a completely unreliable company," remarked neighbor John Sullivan. "We shouldn't believe anything they say!"

Despite the discussion becoming heated at moments, MHC member Lisa Beatman stated that these types of talks are important since they display "Democracy in action".

Caroline Kimball-Katz, the Deputy Chief of Staff for City Councilor Andrea Campbell, was present at the meeting to discuss diversity and inclusion within the Boston Fire and Police Departments. A city-commissioned report that discussed a "male dominated" culture within the Boston Fire Department was released last week.

Yet, many female firefighters and city officials, including Andrea Campbell, believe this report is "overdue" and "insufficient". Campbell feels the city needs to do more than just put together a 41 page report. Campbell has discussed creating a fire cadet program and raising the budget for the diversity officer.

Out of the 1,500 members in the Boston Fire Department, only 16 are women. Four of these women are white, ten are black, and two are Hispanic; and only one is a commanding officer. A Boston Globe article published last May highlighted this issue, as well as claims of sexual assault, sexual harassment, and other disturbing allegations.

Kimball-Katz says both the Boston Fire and Police departments are in need of more diversity, which includes more women and increased racial diversity. The city of Boston will be holding more hiring information sessions, such as a "Boston Police Information Session with Women in Blue" on Jan. 30. This event is hosted by the Mayor's Office of Women's Advancement, which will give information on the Boston Police hiring process to become a Police Officer. It is a great opportunity to hear from trailblazing, female leadership within the BPD encouraging other women to pursue careers in law enforcement.

Tim McCarthy announces he's not running again

District 5 City Councilor Tim McCarthy announced last week he will not be running again for District 5. Here he describes his reasons for leaving.

The past year was one of great change for my family. After a decade in the classroom, my wife, Maureen, made a transition back into the private sector. My son Dolan, on the other hand, after two years of college, decided to step out of the classroom and take this time to join the United States Army. He finished infantry training in December and is poised to begin his assignment in Fort Carson, Colorado Springs. My youngest son, Garrett, graduated from Catholic Memorial and is continuing his academic career at Stonehill College, where he is playing football and studying criminal justice.

We supported one another through these exciting decisions, and as a family, have embraced these changes. As a husband and father, I could not be more proud of all that my loved ones have achieved— their hard work, efforts, successes, courage — and I am repeatedly inspired by their courage and determination.

And so I have begun to look inward, and reflect on my experiences and where I am in my own career. Being a member of the Boston City Council has been an incredible adventure and it has been a pleasure to serve the people of Boston. I have been a part of history, and have worked with so many great people, organizations and community groups. I have overseen so many aspects of city government during my 26+ years, and believe I have made a positive impact on the neighborhoods and people that I have served. I have worked to secure millions of dollars for District 5 over 6 years and $38 million in capital funding this year alone. My team has endeavored with you, the community, to make District 5 a better place to live, work, and play.

After a great deal of reflection and discussion with my family over Christmas break, I feel that it is time for me to make a change, and to move on to my next adventure, whatever that might be. Therefore, I will not be seeking reelection in 2019. It has been an honor to serve as your City Councilor. I will continue to serve throughout the remainder of my term. I will also be fully engaged in helping to select our next representative, to ensure the continuation of the great work my office has been part of since elected. I want to wish all of the people of Boston, Mayor Walsh, my city and state colleagues and District 5 a happy and healthy 2019!

Dear Heart of Jesus, in the past I have asked You for many favours. This time, I ask you this very special one (mention favour). Take it, dear Heart of Jesus, and place it within Your own broken heart where Your Father sees it. Then, in His merciful eyes, it will become Your favour, not mine. Amen. Say for three days, promise publication and favour will be granted.

administration were there to work in partnership with residents and, one conclusion we came up with, was creating a unit within BPD that would explicitly focus on enforcement of traffic laws.”

Campbell said that the hearing could also separately look into installing cameras at intersections and areas.

“There are pros and cons, there are many reports out there that say this could be a good thing and this could be a bad thing,” she said. “Some concerns that have come up from other communities include the downside of possibly using cameras, whether it’s just more surveillance in certain communities and what that means, or whether it’s having a disproportionate impact on folks who truly don’t have the ability to pay, so I think this is a great time in conjunction with this conversation in creating this new enforcement unit or expanding what already exists in BPD to talk about using cameras.”

District 1 City Councilor Lydia Edwards said this hearing is welcome, especially after the recent cycling and pedestrian deaths in the city, but she said enforcement of current traffic policies is the only way to make the city’s streets safer.

“This is a life and death issue,” she said. “With all the great ideas we’ve had either with slowing down traffic or looking at charging for parking, it always comes down to the same thing, and that’s enforcement. So it is true that we need to look at how we’re going to put our money where our mouths are when it comes to enforcement, not just good ideas.”

Edwards said in her district, the only thing that seems to keep traffic moving safely, especially during all the construction projects in the area, is a police presence. She said the influx of development in Boston could be a funding mechanism for this new unit within the BPD.

“I do think that with our neighborhood in East Boston, with the way the traffic has been going recently, we have found that there’s really only been one thing that has worked and that is having a police detail to keep us moving while we’re in the middle of construction by the tunnel, and it’s the same for Sullivan Square in Charlestown,” she said. “We need to have more development dollars go in to help to support these kinds of enforcement initiatives.”

District 2 City Councilor Edward Flynn said he and District 3 City councilor Frank Baker have introduced a hearing order to look at, once again, reducing the speed in Boston from 25 mph to 20 mph, with added enforcement.

“Pedestrian safety is critical, I think it’s the number one issue facing our city,” he said.

District 7 City Councilor Kim Janey said her district has been clamoring for these kinds of improvements for years. However, she said she’s hesitant on speed cameras.

“Enforcement is clearly a huge issue, one we have to make sure we have improvements in our infrastructure,” she said. “I’m not sure I’m really in support of more surveillance cameras, but I think it’s worth a discussion and hearing the pros and cons of both of those.”

Artists Assembly of Massachusetts (HAAM). Yet some of her most recent paintings demonstrate the wisdom of a prodigy, with the use of shadows and light reserved for more accomplished painters.

“Elliana began showing interest in painting at the age of two,” according to her father, artist Joseph M. Chery, also a HAAM member.

At that time, Joseph was working on a painting while Elliana was looking out the window during the autumn.

“She decided then that she wanted to try painting,” he said. “She dabbled with it, and she painted some leaves falling on the ground. Every time I would be painting, she would ask for paint and brush to paint as well.”

Since age four, she has attended every HAAM meeting with her father, learning about concepts like horizon and shadows to use in her work.

“The horizon is when the sky meets the land,” she explained during her talk, surrounded by family and friends, sitting on Joseph’s lap. More than 50 people attended the exhibit.

Elliana said her favorite things to paint are nature and people. She has 18 paintings in the exhibit, which will be on display until February 28.

“I love flowers and bright colors,” she said. “One of my favorite paintings is the one of the flowers in the vase.”

One of her latest works was more complex. It displayed a bird flying to a nest. She sketched the outline first, then used acrylic paint.

“I like to draw things first,” Elliana explained. “Then I can paint the colors.”

Elliana’s compositions included three paintings of people: Santa Claus, an African American man and an African American woman. The works showed a remarkable use of symmetry, shadowing and highlights, especially considering her tender age. The faces appeared virtually three dimensional because of the lighter tones of brown around the cheeks, noses and hairlines.

“The man I just made up in my head,” Eliana said, pointing to his blue and white striped shirt. “I really liked doing that beard.”

“Who is that woman?,” asked Tatiana Jacques of Boston, her god sister.

“That’s me,” said the first-grader with a grin. She gave a tour, noting her love of nature and animals, especially deer.

“She is very alert, and she knows what she wants,” Jacques said. “Even when she is getting dressed, she has to have certain colors and a certain look.”

Ann Herrick, the co-founder of Artists-at-Large (AAL), who sponsored the exhibit with the library, said the mission of the organization is to showcase both emerging and seasoned artists of all ages and display their talents to a wide audience.

“This is exactly the event that we like to hold,” she said. “We want to show talented artists who are both starting out and better known, display their works professionally, and make them available to a wider audience who may not be able to see them otherwise. That’s why we love showing at venues like the library.”

She added that AAL’s office recently moved to Norwood. The organization will be holding a variety of exhibits and programming in Hyde Park in the coming months, including the annual “Havana in Hyde Park” festival.

Elliana’s favorite colors are pink, purple and red. However, she tends to use multiple colors and shades in her work now that her skills have increased. She uses pastels for the majority of her paintings, but accents them with bright reds, yellows, oranges and fuchsia.

While her goal of painting is “to have fun,” Elliana did have an objective for her first show.

“I want to sell my paintings for $20 each,” she said. “Except for the one my mom likes the best.”

Mary Hogan, a West Roxbury artist, was excited to purchase the Santa painting and see Elliana’s enthusiasm.

“I love Santa, and now I have Santas in all shades for my collection,” she said.

“I just think she’s fabulous,” she added. “She’s adorable. Plus she is so talented. It really shows in her paintings on nature, especially the one with the birds.”

“A lot of times, talented artists have to go to school to unlearn what they were taught as children to unleash their creativity,” Duken Delpe, an artist and HAAM member, explained. “But look at talented artists like Van Gogh and Picasso. That’s what you see with Elliana. She has it as a child.”

He added that she also is learning from experienced artists from her own culture, which is an added benefit.

“I am seeing her growing up with a passion,” Delpe said.

“She is definitely the boss of everything she does,” added Joseph, who was clearly one proud father.

CM Basketball Team leads funeral for Army Vet

Sophomore Kurtis Henderson and senior Brendan Ryan led the funeral procession of deceased U.S. Army Veteran Timothy Fowl (1961-2018) as pallbearers alongside six of their Catholic Memorial School basketball teammates and their head coach, Mr. Denis Tobin, in the school chapel on Thursday morning, January 10 (9:45 am).

The six teammates accompanying Kurtis (of Brockton) and Brendan (of Milton) as pallbearers were Spencer Aronson (of Holliston), Ayobami Ogungbadero (of Stoughton), Pat Manning (of Weymouth), Jalen Jordan (of Hyde Park), Declan O’Sullivan (of Quincy), and Ikenna Azums (of Hyde Park). All eight student-athletes wheeled the casket into the school’s chapel after Lawler and Crosby Funeral Home delivered the casket to the West Roxbury campus by hearse.

Mr. Fowl, a Medical Specialist in the U.S. Army from 1983 to 1986, died with no identifiable family or friends.

“CM has taught me the difference between right and wrong,” said Brendan, a Peer Minister and captain of the basketball team.

“I think it’s important that we choose right over wrong one hundred percent of the time. What we did today is a witness to that. I think being with my brothers and commemorating the life of a soldier as we did here today has only strengthened that bond between all of us. I hope that kids can learn from our team’s bond, personally, and the bond of this special community on campus.”

As pallbearers, the basketball team carried on CM’s mission of solidarity with those on the margins. Mr. Kevin Durazo, the Director of Campus Ministry, asked the eight basketball players to take on this service initiative on Monday afternoon. All eight agreed to volunteer without any hesitation, according to Mr. Durazo. Three separate CM classes also attended the funeral to pay their respects.

Father Peter Stamm of St. Joseph Parish in Needham celebrated the funeral Mass. He offered a homily and eulogy for Mr. Fowl.

At the conclusion of the funeral Mass, all eight student-athletes led the casket’s procession out of the chapel. Together, they carried the casket through the lobby and outside to the hearse. Before loading the casket into the hearse, the boys presented the casket to an Army Honor guard who stood in front of the school’s half-mast American flag post.

The honor guard presented Mr. Fowl and his casket with full military honors. This included a customary playing of Taps, a presentation of the American flag to Head Coach Denis Tobin, and a final salute.

Peter Folan at the conclusion of the Mass.

“A proud family. We’re a community that welcomes people in and accepts them for where they are. We ask them to join us on our journey toward being more, doing more, and caring for others.”

In November of 2017, CM began hosting funerals for homeless veterans when the school laid to rest Army veteran John T. Fitzmaurice, who also died with no living friends or family. Most recently, the CM football team laid to rest Air Force veteran Markham Lyons before a Sectional playoff game this past November.

This marks CM’s fifth funeral service for veterans over the past year and a half.

Through CM’s Campus Ministry program, students complete over 15,000 service hours in the greater-Boston area each year at organizations such as homeless shelters, food pantries, and the neighboring West Roxbury Veteran’s Affairs Hospital. As a part of its ministry, CM aims to host one funeral service for homeless veterans during each quarter of the academic school year.

CM partners with Lawler and Crosby Funeral Home for the planning purposes of each veteran funeral. Both services coordinate the casket, hearse, and transportation needed for the burial.

brothers travelled back to Chechenia a country they had sought "fake" refuge from for jihadi training. The 9/11 Commission concluded that 15 of the 19 hijackers were vulnerable to potential foil by authorities because of their immigration status. That Commission also concluded that targeting travel is at least as powerful a terrorism-fighting weapon as targeting terrorist funding.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court in the bogus Lunn ruling has made Massachusetts a Sanctuary State. Several government entities (including Boston) have taken this lunacy even further not allowing their police to cooperate with ICE. The Catechism of the Catholic Church states clearly in section 2241: "Political authorities, for the sake of the common good for which they are responsible, may make the exercise of the right to immigrate subject to various judicial conditions, especially with regard to the immigrants' duties toward their country of adoption. Immigrants are obliged to respect with gratitude the material and spiritual heritage of the country that receives them, to obey its laws and to assist in carrying civic burdens."

There are so many ways that illegal aliens do not obey our laws; 1.9 billion in Massachusetts welfare state aid is given to illegals, wage suppression, tax evasion, identity fraud, illegal alien drunk driving homicides, child molestations, and unfunded burdens on our education system to name but a few. However, the greatest evil which illegal aliens have brought to West Roxbury, Dedham, and Roslindale is the heroin and fentanyl trade. Those key ingredients are smuggled by Mexican drug cartels, who also profit by smuggling people into the United States. The Boston Police Department leaked their regional Heroin Overdose Report in 2016, it said, "In 59% of the cases where the suspect listed Puerto Rico as their place of birth, there were signs of identity fraud or use of aliases. This would suggest that heroin trafficking in Boston is largely controlled by Dominican drug organizations." Many great families in and around that misguided parish in Dedham will be yearning for a missing loved one this Christmas. A loved one who has been caught up in the ugly spider's web of addiction, incarceration, and death that are opioids.

Organized crime is alive and well in greater Boston. These mafioso are illegal aliens. Their crimes are being propped up by the ACLU, social justice warriors, progressive judges, liberal politicians, and liberal churches who don't understand that charity starts at home.

including retail in the area, as well as create new construction jobs.

The filing also states that the site is one block from the Hyde Park Commuter Rail Station and 3 tenths of a mile away from the Fairmount Commuter Rail Station. The filing also notes Patel's success at developing housing, for which he has built 145 construction projects.

Residents have expressed concern about the project in the past. During the Hyde Park Neighborhood Association's (HPNA) August meeting, Fairmount Hill Neighborhood Association President Joe Smith said the group had held a pre-file meeting with the developer, and he wasn't pleased with the prospect.

"I am outraged that this kind of project is, in fact, within the zoning code," Smith said during the meeting. "I am surprised by it and shocked by it and we need to do something about those kinds of zoning violations that are occurring in our town... How much do we have to put up with in Hyde Park from North Shore developers who come in and put up developments? They think we're stupid, and they think we don't understand."

Resident and HPNA member Craig Martin said in the past and more recently that he and several residents will be fighting the development. He said he believes the zoning for the project to be incorrect, and thinks the developer will have to go through the Boston Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) and the IDP process.

"The whole thing was screwed up right from the beginning," he said. "They're claiming it's as-of-right, but it's not, and at this meeting coming up we're going to inform them."

Martin said he has invited BPDA Senior Planner Marie Mercurio to the meeting to go over the zoning issues, since she helped with the initial rezoning of Hyde Park in 2011.

"She's the one who should know the bylaw, and we want to get her down there," he said. "Then we'll bring up our argument."

Martin said he does not wish to broadcast the argument before the meeting, but he said he feels confident they can at least make an impression.

"We're going to wait until the meeting to find out exactly what they have," he said. "I have a feeling they're misinterpreting something... We're going to oppose this, for what it's worth."

hefty city real estate taxes—and these wants are also true for those in higher tax brackets living in posh neighborhoods.

If the city seems to want us, would it make overtures to developers to construct seniors-only apartments in all the neighborhoods, with rents at the going-rate?

Yes, there may be private condominiums outside the city limits that will accept us, but a lot of the money accrued from selling may go their way. We'd rather apartments within the city that harbor just the elderly, and we'll pay the going rental rate, expensive though it be. It's just too bad with all this proliferation of apartment building currently taking place, facilitated by the generous granting of building variances to enable shoe-horning structures into small lots, no senior citizen accommodation has been made, until a spend-down takes place in the future. I guess this is OK for seniors who want to travel, donate large sums to charities, and present financial gifts (without tax implications for recipients) to their children.

We're not part of Tom Brokaw's The Greatest Generation. We haven't fought in Korea. But many of today's seniors have fought in Vietnam and the mid-East. Yes, Boston Water and Sewer gives us a break on our water bills, as does the T with our senior Charlie cards. But our generation deserves more from the City than Thanksgiving and Christmas luncheons and elderly transport vans. While senior bowling is a delight, it would be even better if the city built more housing for those of us eager to downsize—with the added benefit of adding more housing stock—thereby enabling us to stay with people of our own age groups preferably near our current our zip codes, near family and friends, before health issues make their dreaded and macabre intrusion.

Insight Realty Group is happy to work with Anna's Pals and hope you'll attend this great fundraiser or support this local non-profit. Anna's Pals was founded in memory of West Roxbury's Anna Jerome who lost her battle with Leukemia in 2014 at the age of 15. She went to St. Theresa School before attending Boston Latin. Anna was a great daughter, sister, friend and student, maintaining her approbation (honor roll) status while hospitalized. Not an easy task! Her illness required long hospital stays due to the depletion of her immune system, which led to long hours of loneliness and isolation. Anna's Pals is working to build a beach house for kids with little to no immune systems, a place where they can escape from the hospital and isolation. This house will need to be built with mold- and mildew-resistant materials, and will be specifically designed to meet the day-to-day needs of these fragile patients. These young people may not be able to "Make a Wish", but they will be better able to enjoy time with family and friends in this safe environment.
