P.I.N.C.H. salutes community heroes

The Elks Hall in West Roxbury was packed to standing room only Saturday night, as state and city officials came out to honor community heroes at the annual People in Neighborhoods Can Help (P.I.N.C.H.) awards.

More than 250 people attended the event, created by Frank Sullivan, a Boston Fire Department dispatcher. Born in Dorchester, Sullivan can arguably be called a local hero in his own right. Viciously attacked in Chinatown on Mother's Day in 1979, Sullivan was shot three times – twice in the head and once in the arm.

After a difficult recovery at New England Medical Center, Sullivan realized the anguish others go through when people suffer tragedies. He couldn't have one bullet removed from his head. This rendered him permanently legally blind and partially deaf in one ear.

His empathy led him to create the P.I.N.C.H. Founda-

Roslyn Apartments lose water due to pipe burst

Residents of Roslyn Apartments, a Boston Housing Authority elderly and disabled housing development located at 1 Cliffmont St. in Roslindale, lost water for seven hours when a water main pipe broke Sunday morning.

"We received a call at the Boston Water and Sewer Commission at 8:52 a.m.," said BWSC spokeswoman Nicole Kieser. "We had workers on the scene by 9:15 a.m. The water main was shut off by 10:45."

She added that water was turned back on by 3:45 p.m.

"If they noticed any problems with the water conditions, nothing was reported to us," Kieser added. "Sometimes there are air bubbles or starts and stops. Usually they can be cleared out by running the water or flushing the toilet."

When asked if the water main break affected the nearby train tracks which run parallel to the building and are used by MBTA Commuter Rail and Amtrak trains, Kieser re-

$4.1M library renovation for Ros

Jeff Sullivan

The Roslindale Branch Library was originally constructed to resemble the space-age modern construction of the 1960s.

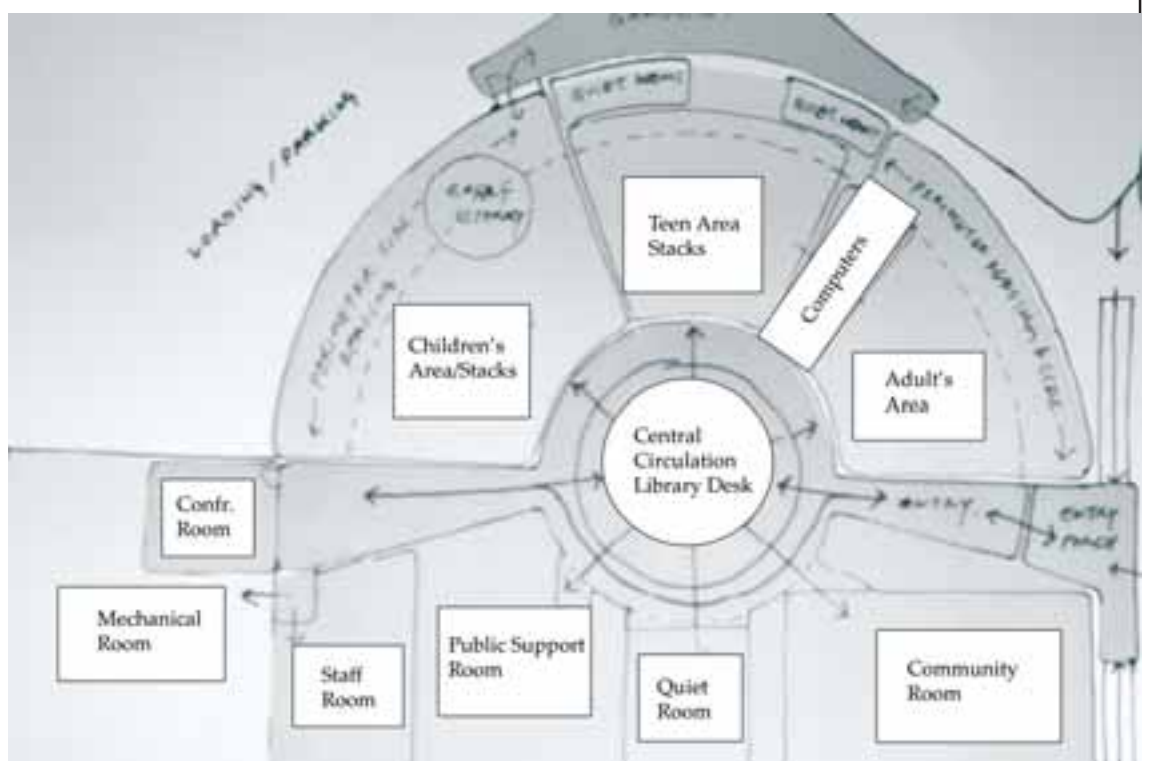

Though officials said they will not be touching much of the exterior, the Boston Public Library (BPL) and the City of Boston have approved a $4.1 million renovation to the aging library. The first steps as described by officials are to make the building more accessible, more modern and more energy efficient.

"We think of the Boston Public Library as one system throughout the city, but every neighborhood, every branch, every building has unique characteristics that really have to be celebrated, so as we move forward with design and renovation projects, yes we are one system, but we want to take our lead from the neighborhood," said BPL President David Leonard.

More than 100 residents packed into the library's community room to here the first design phases of the renova-

BPL officials went over what they said was just a preliminary design for allocation of space. They said this was only a temporary design and things could be changed based on public input.

Roslindale immigrant mural unveiled

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Roslindale Mural Crew, city officials, artists and subjects of the mural all gathered at Atlas Liquors on Saturday for the official unveiling of the To Immigrants With Love Mural.

The mural features Louis and Beatrice White, Russian immigrants and founders of the store, and local business owner Alex Castillo, who emigrated to the U.S. from the Dominican Republic to start Digitech Electronic Solutions in the neighborhood.

Mayor's Mural Crew lead artist Heidi Schork said the project was kind of a spur of the moment. She said she was approached by Immigrant Public Art Coordinator at the Mayor's Office of Immigrant Advancement, Katherine Copeland, for the idea.

"So when Katherine said we really want to focus on immigrants in Boston, I immediately said 'Of course, we'll do as many murals as we possibly can, we'll squeeze them all in, I'll drop everything,'" Schork said. "It's a difficult time right now to be an immigrant anywhere in America... Boston has always been a city that welcomes immigrants. Our city was built by immigrants, hard working people just like the Whites and Alex Castillo, and we must not forget that when we're traveling around the city. That's why I think this project was so important, as a little reminder that we all came from somewhere else in Boston, and every day people are arriving, trying to make that dream happen."

Schork said the message of community and hospitality will always ring true in Boston and Roslindale.

"So that's why on the message that we have written in many languages on the front of Atlas Liquors is that Boston will always welcome immigrants," she said. "You will always be welcome in the City of Boston. I will not do my Mayor Walsh imitation, but you can imagine him saying that of course, and he says it

Sean "Bucky" Malone's family and officials came out to honor the West Roxbury native at the rededication ceremony at Billings Field.

The "Hoppa" leaves his mark

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

Last Thursday the city came together to rename the softball field after the late West Roxbury-born actor Sean F. Malone Jr.

Many of his close friends better knew him as "Bucky" which his brother, Boston Fire Chief Scott Malone says, was a nickname that rang thick since his childhood. Bucky passed away in 2015 after being brought to the hospital from Carson Beach during a swimming incident.

"My brother may have been born Sean, but because of his wearing braces for years longer than the average kid, most people came to know him as 'Bucky,'" Malone said. "Through the years, if I met someone and said I was from West Roxbury and said I was Sean Malone's brother, the question then asked would likely be 'are you related to Bucky Malone?'"

From the "Fighter" to the "Hoppa" commercials, Bucky had quite the acting resume, including appearances in movies playing roles such as "Skinny Ray" in "The Fighter," "Wolfie" in "Gone Baby Gone" and "Finn" from "The Forger."

Scott Malone said his brother's role as "Finn," where he worked alongside Golden Globe Award Winning actor John Travolta, always stood out the most for him.

"As Finn, Sean got his ass kicked by John Travolta," Malone said. "I use to torture him about that, saying 'no paycheck is worth that humiliation.'"

Beyond these various cameos, Scott Malone said he frequently starred in many commercials, the last of which being Direct TV's "The Hoppa," which was probably what he was most known for.

"Sean was also in a bunch of commercials," Malone said. "He played an axe murderer for the ESPN Outdoor Games, as well as a hockey player for MVP Sports. Many of you may remember the Direct TV 'Hoppa' commercials where Sean played a quirky character."

Even though this type of local and national recognition of Bucky could in and of itself validate a commemorative landmark to better remember him, other reasons simultaneously contributed to this honor.

Some, including Massachusetts State Sen. Mike Rush, believe this type of memorial displays the love that this community has for not just him, but the Malone family as a whole.

"This is community at its very best," Rush said. "We have so many different families that contribute to the feel and make up of this community and the Malones are at the top of that list. They are the epitome of public service in terms of coaching and being involved. Everyone around here just loves them. You look around at a turnout like this and, in all honesty, where else are you going to see this on a Thursday night. There's so much energy and excitement to say thank you to an outstanding community family."

For all this and more, after an Ed Coppinger League exhibition match last where the Mofos lost 16-12 to Hank's Yanks, the softball field was renamed after Bucky.

The ceremony consisted of a singing of the National Anthem by West Roxbury resident Tommy DeRosa Sr., immediately proceeded by a few words from Scott Malone, the first of which were a thank you to all those involved in making this possible.

"Before I speak about my brother, equally important is to recognize some of the people who have aided our effort in realizing this posthumous honor for Sean," Malone said. "Some of these people are Mayor Marty Walsh, Sen. Mike Rush and Ann Cushing from his office, our league sponsor State Rep. Eddie Coppinger, City Councilor Matt O'Malley, 2017 MCAS data shows 10th-grade improvements in math

Efforts to develop more rigorous teaching practices within the Boston Public Schools (BPS) have helped raise the number of 10th-grade students scoring proficient or advanced in MCAS mathematics tests to an all-time high, according to data released Wednesday by the Massachusetts Department of Elementary and Secondary Education (DESE).

The 2017 MCAS results show that the proportion of BPS 10th-graders scoring proficient or advanced in math climbed to 67 percent, an increase of one percentage point above the previous year and eight percentage points since 2009.

The district also saw gains in the scores of several student subgroups. The proportion of Black students achieving proficient or advanced in 10th-grade math rose by 3 points, from 58 percent in 2016 to 61 percent this year. Meanwhile, the number of students with disabilities who scored proficient or advanced increased by 2 percentage points, from 27 percent in 2016 to 29 percent in 2017, as did the rate for economically disadvantaged students, which rose from 59 percent in 2016 to 61 percent in 2017.

"We realize that we still have much more work to do to accomplish our goal of closing persistent opportunity and achievement gaps," BPS Superintendent Tommy Chang said.

Nathan Hale Elementary School achieved the district's highest median student growth percentile in both math and English language arts (ELA), reaching a SGP of 77 and 78 in those areas, respectively.

Edward M. Kennedy Academy for Health Careers' saw 98 percent of its students score either proficient or advanced (the two highest performance levels) in ELA, making it the highest performing non-exam school in BPS in this subject.

Jeremiah E. Burke High School, which in 2014 became the first high school in Massachusetts to successfully exit level 4 "Turnaround" status, achieved significant improvements in the 10th-grade math MCAS with a SGP ranking of 73.5 (a 16.5-point increase over the previous year) and a CPI score of 90.3 (a 7.7-point increase from 2016).

While high school students statewide last spring were given the original or what is now referred to as the "Legacy MCAS," students in grades 3 through 8 took, for the first time, a new assessment called "Next Generation MCAS." High schools across the state will shift to the new version beginning in 2019.

After nearly two decades of using the original MCAS test, the state developed the updated assessment in an effort to give school districts a much clearer indication of student's readiness for moving on to the next grade level, as well as college and career.

Since this is the first year of the new assessment, DESE is not providing 2017 accountability levels for schools that administered the new test last spring and met the required participation rates. This means that the majority of BPS schools serving grades 3-8 will not receive an accountability level this year. Additionally, DESE has decided this year not to place any additional schools throughout the state into Level 4 "Turnaround" or Level 5 designations.

The new MCAS assessment, which was designed to be given on a computer, focuses on testing a student's critical-thinking abilities, application of knowledge, and ability to make connections between reading and writing. It has also developed more rigorous standards.

For many schools across the state, the results of the new 2017 MCAS assessment may produce what appear to be lower scores. However, DESE has emphasized that that new test has a different scoring scale and is not meant to be compared to the "Legacy MCAS."

The Next Generation MCAS reflects the Commonwealth's commitment to setting very high standards for student learning and performance. Similarly, the National Assessment for Educational Progress (NAEP), also known as the "Nation's Report Card," sets high standards for college and career readiness.

The percentage of BPS students scoring proficient and above in the most recent NAEP test mirrors the proportion of the district's students achieving the levels of meeting or exceeding expectations on the Next Generation MCAS.

To help advance this goal, BPS this summer implemented the "Essentials for Instructional Equity," a set of research-based resources intended to support the kind of rigorous instruction that will allow BPS students to meet this high academic bar.

BPS has posted school-level results from the 2017 spring MCAS on our website at: <https://www.bostonpublicschools.org/reports>

"O Lord, I cannot understand your ways, but I must adore them."

Theodoere James Syken,
Founder of the Xaverian Brothers

When one of Jamaica Plain's best recently passed away, several dozen teenage boys gave up their late Friday afternoon and evening to help hundreds, if not several thousand, mourners snaking in long lines to pay their final respects at their high school.

Garbed in suit coats and ties, they stood as ushers, parking attendants, and helpers on a spectacular autumnal Friday as Xaverian Brother Raymond Hoyt, C.F.X. was waked in the chapel at the high school where until recently he had been vice-principal.

The teenagers were not there serving punishment duty, they were not there because of any extra-curricular club, they were not there because their coaches instructed them to do so, nor were they there because of "girls" (the high school is all-boys).

They were there to show how much they revered the assistant principal, Brother Ray, whose main job in any school is sometimes thankless: that of disciplinarian trying to resolve student conflicts and deciding on how much guilt/punishment the violators of school codes deserved.

In short, tough love.

There have not been that many television shows that focus on modern high schools.

"Our Miss Brooks," "Room 222," "Boston Public," and "Welcome Back, Kotter" readily come to mind.

Had their hair had been a tad longer and their clothes disheveled and had they spoken with a few dee's and dem's and doh's, the teens who assisted mourners both inside and outside Xaverian Brothers High School might have passed at first glance as Gabe Kaplan's Sweathogs. And just as the Hogs revered their teacher, Mr. Kotter, so did Xaverian teens revere their former assistant principal, who died an untimely death at age 64 because of ALS.

And who was this Jamaica Plain native who won so many students' and their parents' respect? Born on the last day of February in 1953, Hoyt attended Xaverian Brothers High School straddling the Westwood-Norwood town line by probably catching a bus daily out of Forest Hills. Influenced so positively by the order of religious brothers, he entered the Congregation of Xaverian Brothers in September 1971 and took his Profession of Vows in the summer of 1974.

Most people confuse religious brothers with priests. Theirs is also a religious vocation, a special calling from our Creator to serve others. At one time brothers in various male religious orders such as the Josephites, Jesuits, and Maryknolls, assumed more of the manual tasks, such as cooking, carpentry, and gardening. But today's religious brothers are frequently on a par with priests; they teach and administer, while having taken the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. Brother Ray had bachelor's and master's degrees from Boston College.

His fight with Lou Gehrig's disease did not last long. He passed away at a hospice in Danvers after a very short stay.

After Mass on Sunday at Brighton's St. Ignatius, he will no longer be following his routine of shopping at Roche Brothers for his invalid Roslindale father.

Indeed, Brother Ray will be missed by many, especially by the boys at their high school on Clapboardtree Street.

THANKS FOR FAIRMOUNT/INDIGO SUPPORT!

To the Editor:

The Fairmount/Indigo Train Line has a friend in Mayor Marty Walsh! Everyone in Dorchester, Mattapan and Hyde Park should realize how hard, and for how many years, these communities in the Fairmount Corridor have been fighting for greater public transit access. And NOW, Mayor Walsh, who has been supportive of our efforts to increase service on the Fairmount/Indigo Line since taking office in 2013, has put real muscle behind his support by calling for rapid transit on this Line in the City's Imagine 2030 Plan and actively working to make this a reality. These neighborhoods are the most under-served in Boston. Bus service is unreliable or, in some places, nearly non-existent. We believe that with the Mayor's help area residents will see an incredible increase in access to jobs in Newmarket, Hyde Park and Downtown Boston and our local businesses and new businesses will be able to thrive and grow along the corridor as potential employees and customers have an easier way to get to them. We are very grateful for Mayor Walsh's support in our efforts to expand this service and promote transit equity in Dorchester, Mattapan and Hyde Park.

MHMC talks Slow Streets Walk, Taco Bell

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Mount Hope Mount Canterbury Neighborhood Association (MHMC) met last week and discussed the upcoming improvements to the neighborhood from the city's Slow Streets program.

The city awarded the neighborhood street improvements through Slow Streets to help increase safety in the neighborhood's side streets along the south of American Legion Highway, basically behind the American Legion Shopping Center, as a measure to calm traffic in the area.

The previous week, the group walked the neighborhood for two hours with the Boston Transportation Department BTM and stopped to talk with residents along the route. MHMC member Rick Yoder said the discussions they had with residents were very helpful to advocate for the neighborhood.

"We had at least 35 homes of people come out all around the neighborhood and they gave testimony of what it's like to live in our neighborhood with this fast-moving cut-through traffic," he said. "Just about everybody talked about speed humps and physical things like that to slow cars down."

Yoder added BTM will also be funding four other neighborhoods through the program, and he believes the amount of funding the neighborhood will get will be based on the perceived need of the neighborhood.

"There are five neighborhoods for a finite amount of money, so there's probably not enough to do a full build-out everywhere," he said. "It was very helpful to see the real need that we have."

Yoder said the BTM designers heading the program will come back early next year with some designs and public review.

"We'll give it a look and give them some input and tweak it a bit, and the installation will be sometime next year," he said.

MHMC member Lisa Beatman said it was a great advantage having the BTM actually see the need instead of hearing about it in letters or testimony.

The Transportation Department employees were very very impressed by how much turnout how many neighbors showed up they had come from doing some other walk-throughs where they said when they would go by houses occasionally someone would see them and come out but it really just shows how strong we are together," she said, adding that there was a particular problem with the bus stop at the intersection of Mount Hope Street and Canterbury Street. "A bus dropped off kids right at the corner and it wasn't just someone writing to describe the problem, they were able to see these little kids and the parents."

Yoder added that residents who still want to give testimony should email Stephanie.Seskin@Boston.gov.

The MHMC also talked about the importance of keeping up the fight against Taco Bell. Yoder said they want to keep up the pressure in City Hall.

"They still very much want to have a presence next to the Haley School and it's going to be up to us to stop them," he said. "We very much need the Haley parents like last time to be involved in this and collect more signatures."

Yoder said Boston Mayor Marty Walsh is receptive to their opposition, but added that they need to keep up the pressure.

"Twice now he said he supports us on this but he emphasized that we have to keep up this education and awareness of this," he said. "We have commitments from city councilors, which is important because this will probably show up at a (Boston Zoning Board of Appeals) meeting."

Beatman said the only way to keep this fast food chain out of the American Legion Shopping Center, which already has seven fast food chains, is advocacy.

"We will make this happen but we will make this happen by continuing to show up and the mayor has said a few times show and said to Charter Foods who owns Taco Bell, that there is no community support for this," she said.

Age Old WISDOM
by Gregory Karr, CEO and Deborah L. McPhee, Comm. Relations

ACTS OF GENEROSITY

Older individuals are likely to find that they are in a position to give to others in terms of time, energy, or money. Those who find that "it is better to give than to receive" know that acts of generosity not only help others, but also help themselves. In fact, researchers recently conducted a study that looked into generosity's effect on the brain. They found that performing an act of generosity, no matter how small, made generous individuals happier. This means that even charitable acts that did not necessarily involve a great deal of sacrifice were conducive to givers' happiness. With this in mind, we should all be committed to performing random acts of kindness for others.

As people become older, their values often shift away from purely personal interests to more enduring sources of meaning found in their communities. Older adults will find a spirit of community that embraces the realities of aging while promoting the joys of living at DEUTSCHES ALTENHEIM. Please call to schedule a consultation and tour of our senior community at 2222 Centre Street, West Roxbury. "Ask about our Schrafft Pavilion for Alzheimer/Dementia Care and Edelweiss Village."

P.S. Offering to go food shopping for a neighbor with limited mobility can prove to be a most rewarding experience for both parties involved.

tion plan. Architects Jennifer Hardy and Tom Chung – both from Leers Weinzapfel Associates – said they want to redo the layout of the building.

The first, and probably most impactful change they suggested to residents, was changing the location of the entrance. They said they wanted to move it easterly, towards the radial construction of the library's iconic bay windows stretching around Washington Street to Poplar Street.

"We looked at the next bay of the structure, and that's where the last straight portion of the structure is before the radial geometry begins," Chung said.

The moving of the entrance would allow for a new community room right to the left of the entrance and would allow the this room to be open and kind of a viewing area for those meeting there. The move would also allow to widen the entrance and it gives them two options to increase accessibility to the library.

Chung said the two plans are as follows: The first would move the handicap ramp to the Poplar Street side and make it a more gradual incline, thus taking away the need for handrails with steps on the other side of the entrance. The second option would be to install ramps on both sides with no handrails.

Residents said they were concerned about the lack of handrails, as winters make it dangerous for senior citizens.

The proposed layout of the library, as they have currently distributed space, would put an open area for the three adult, teen and children's sections. The central space of the library would be used for staff and the circulation desk, and the back of the library would be used for a quiet room, a conference room, library staff rooms and mechanical rooms. Chung also said the basement would be renovated to allow for storage there.

Friends of the Roslindale Library members asked that the designers look into possibly having an office space in the basement for the group's activities. Chung said he does not believe the library basement to be suitable for that, since there is no natural light, but the Friends said that would not be a problem.

Some residents asked that the community room be available for use after library hours, and Chung said that is something residents would have to take up with the BPL.

"I am connected to programs at the library that we cannot have onsite because of when they take place; if we had access to a room a little later on Thursday evening it would be very helpful," one resident said.

Resident Laura Gang added she saw some problems with placing the community room right off of Washington Street, as loading equipment and musical instruments into the area would be problematic.

Resident Steve Gag said he wants to make sure the exterior is not neglected. Chung said earlier in the presentation that they would be looking to update the planters and landscaping around the building, but Gag said he wanted the site more well-lit.

"This is an icon building for the neighborhood, it's in a position of the streetscape where you see it no matter where you are in the Square," he said. "I know it's not open in the evenings, but it can add value to people's experience if it has some better exterior lighting. We don't do enough of that; we should be doing it with this place here."

The design team's goals for the project are as follows: a more accessible entrance, an efficient circulation station, self check out and pick up areas, children's room with early literacy nook, teen space, adults space, tech in all age groups, lots of outlets, strategic placement of copy machine and printer, multi-purpose room, staff work room and break room office, staff access points in public areas, an update of the furniture, light fixture replacement, flooring replacement, paint update, new restrooms, signage in the exterior interior directional and collections, updated mechanical electrical and plumbing and fire protection systems upgrades and security upgrades.

The team said they will have another community meeting with a more concrete design later in December and they hope to have another in the winter/spring of 2018 with the final designs. Right before construction begins, tentatively scheduled for 2019, there will be another community meeting. Officials said that if all goes to plan, they will shut down the library for one year of construction with a completion date of 2020.

Officials said suggestions for the library should be sent to pfoley@bpl.org.

all the time. I think that's a very important thing to think about."

Castillo said he was amazed to be one of the subjects on the mural. He said he was proud to be a success story in Boston, and since moving has always been proud to call Boston home.

"I want to thank everyone for being here today, it's an honor to receive this certificate," he said. "I wanted to say I'm proud because where we come from, it's a very poor country. Today, it reminds me how 30 years ago I came here; my family, my kids, my wife. I mean my kids were born here but my brothers and my family, we all know the stuff we had to go through to make it. From the language barrier, to call home.

"We moved to Boston in 2004, and since then it's always been to me, my city," he said. "It's been great, we've been welcomed by loads of people, and I think everybody around here will hopefully do the same."

Natalie Fernsebner of Atlas Liquors spoke for the current grand-sires of the White family – herself, Jeff Fine and Peter Fine – during the event and said that these kinds of reminders of inclusion and community are what the city and the country need right now.

"I don't want to get too political, but it seems pretty dicey out there in the world today," she said. "To be a third generation person from a family that came from elsewhere and just leave food and things on the doorstep, so it's nice to recognize her for that," she said.

City Council President Michelle Wu said the White family went through its own tough times, but stuck through it all to be a real success in Boston.

"Lou and Beatrice White emigrated from Russia as Louis and Beatrice Whitesman before arriving at Ellis Island in the early 1900s," she said. "Like many immigrants at the time, their name was changed when they came to the United States, and like many immigrants they built a life for themselves in Boston. They came to Boston during prohibition where they opened White's Supermarket, and they were always forward-thinking, so after prohibition, they bought a liquor license for the supermarket to become the full liquor store and employed folks in the neighborhood. This was also the first liquor store to use female clerks, truly empowering everyone."

Wu added she's proud to live in a neighborhood like Roslindale.

"This neighborhood, this city is so amazing," she said. "I've lived here for a little over two years now and I just appreciate the fact that in the city and Roslindale, we are truly a place for everybody."

"To be a third generation person from a family that came from elsewhere and to see people now that are in the same situation, it feels like such an honor to be a part of an initiative to welcome and send the message that we are a tolerant place."

Roslindale Fall Fest hits Birch Street

Hundreds of residents came out on Sunday to participate in the first-ever Roslindale Fall Festival. The festival shut down Birch Street in Roslindale Square for three hours and created a bazaar-type atmosphere. The event was sponsored in part by District 5 City Councilor Tim McCarthy and the Roslindale Business Group (RBG). Music filtered down from local bands, and several local artists showed their stuff during the day.

sponded, “That’s a good question. I don’t know the answer to that.”

She did thank the residents of the 119-apartment complex for their patience during the ordeal.

“As always, we work to restore the service as quickly as possible,” Kieser said.

Maisha Miraj, a Boston Police Department spokesperson, confirmed that the police arrived on the scene of the water main break at 8:55 a.m.

Several BWSC workers were on site for several hours Sunday afternoon while residents stood outside, watched the progress and commented on what happened.

“I woke up this morning at about 9 a.m. and didn’t have any water,” said one resident, who asked to remain anonymous. “The water pressure was so low. Now we’re playing the waiting game. It’s 11:44 a.m. right now. There has been no notification to the residents. We’re hoping somebody will do something. We have no water. We can’t cook, can’t bathe.

“It’s sad. There’s no laundry. They said it probably won’t be fixed until late tonight.”

A call to the Boston Housing Authority Work Order Center Sunday morning at approximately 10:30 a.m. confirmed the water main break. An operator said that the building manager, Judie Shields, had been notified. Because it was a Sunday, she was not on duty at the building. The staff custodian, Hayden Reed, was on vacation, according to several residents.

“There was an eight-inch water main break here that has affected 1 Cliffmont St. up to Seymour Street,” said BWSC worker Billy O’Brien. “This whole section had been shut down for about a block, block and a half.”

“I saw the whole thing happen,” said resident Linda Cummins. “I was out there this morning a little after 8 o’clock. I was coming down the street, and all of a sudden, I heard this roar. Then, bah boom! I see all this water shoot up. I ran in the building. I called up the work order number. There was no water.”

Resident Joanna Brock came into the building with gallon bottles of water.

“What else can I do,” she asked? “I don’t know when the water will be on.”

The entrance of the building, which is at the bottom of a steep hill, was muddy. BWSC were excavating the street to get to the pipeline during the interview.

would have helped pay back his sign holders in the building trades unions! Marty’s ties to the “Outfit” that is the Laborers International Union of North America is a topic for another time. Now he has to settle for shoe horning flimsy, fire trap apartment buildings, rubber stamped by the Inspectional Dis-service Department into any conceivable space in order to deal with a contrived housing “crises.”

Next, Marty decided he wanted to turn South Boston into a Formula One race track. I think Dot Ave, beginning in lower Mills right down to Andrew Square (what a straight-a-way!)

Since marijuana is now legal, they must be smoking up a storm in City Hall, because the next stop on the Magical Mystery Tour, while it will not be the last, might be the best. In order to deal with their phony housing “crises,” they want us, according to the Boston Globe, to take in BOARDERS! Like in my basement or in one of my sheds, and if you don’t have space in your house, “Buddy” of the Dis-Services Department will allow you to bypass zoning laws (something they started to do a long time ago) and construct extensions on your house to house “graduate” students or illegal immigrants or junkies or criminals right out of Marty’s friend Sheriff Tompkins South Bay Prison. Marty’s hacks should start by asking all the folks out in West Roxbury and Roslindale who have Walsh signs on their lawns if they will back the mayor on this idea. As for me, you’ll have to excuse me. I just want to sit back and take another toke so I can stay on Marty Walsh’s Magical Mystery Tour!

Sean claimed that another attribute besides humor possessed by his father was a phenomenal ability to empathize with others.

“Most of all, whether he was right or wrong about what he was telling you, he made you believe he cared,” Sean Malone said. “He had the ability to make you believe you were the only one in the room.”

“Sean was born on New Year’s Day, the first baby of 1961,” Malone said. “He was on the front page of every newspaper. For any future wannabe actor, what a great start: Front page on the first day. The only problem is they spelled his name wrong. So to me, this honor is the universe’s way of saying ‘we spelled your name wrong on the way in, but we are spelling right on the way out.’” tion, a 501c3 nonprofit charity to assist people with their expenses for medical equipment and other needs. His wife Lisa, daughters Brianna and Shannon, along with numerous community volunteers and contributing businesses and sponsors, have kept the effort going for more than 15 years.

"The first time I moved in my hospital bed, I heard the song, 'Ain't No Stoppin' Us Now' on the radio," Sullivan said. "It was a popular song at the time. It has really motivated me. My friends kept calling radio stations telling them what happened and to play it over and over. Even now, when people hear it, they call me."

At Saturday's ceremony, Sullivan honored five volunteers for their work in the community. Boston Mayor Martin J. Walsh, the keynote speaker, presented the Jack Leary Quiet Leadership Award to Boston Police Commissioner William Evans.

"Jack was a great community guy and a great family guy," noted Evans. "I love my job. I love working with guys like the Mayor and keeping kids from getting in trouble."

"In closing, I want to thank everyone for showing up," he continued. "It's a privilege to get an award in the name of Jack Leary, and I will hold it very close to my heart."

"I'm very happy to get this award," said Evans after the presentation. "He was a great man, and this will help to keep his memory alive."

The You Are the ONE (Outstanding Neighbors Everyday) Award went to Jenn and Ross Birch.

"You can look up the word 'outstanding' in the dictionary and see Ross and Jen," Sullivan said. "How does one have the free time to volunteer at each of her four kids' schools like Jen does? She puts others before herself. Ross has coached little league for years."

"I get the mic, so I get to thank my wife Jen. She does a volunteer job for a volunteer's pay. Jen and I don't feel like we're doing anything special," Birch said.

He added that "West Roxbury is feeling like we're taking a couple of heavy hits lately" with the loss of long-time community leaders including Mary Mulvey Jacobson, Marilyn LaRosa and Alice Hennessey.

Dan Conley, Suffolk County District Attorney, presented the Paul C. McLaughlin We Will Always Remember Award to Doyle's Café owner Gerry Burke Sr., a lifelong Jamaica Plain resident.

"When I first ran for office, I asked Gerry how much it would cost me to hold an event at Doyle's," said Conley. "Gerry said, 'Nothing.' He passed the wand, or the baton, to Gerry, his son. So, the Thursday before St. Patrick's Day, if you want to come to Doyle's, he has never changed his price. And I haven't changed my prices, either. It's still $25."

"Doyle's is a quaint pub, isn't it," he asked. "You always feel comfortable there. That's because of the family."

Conley went on to thank Walsh for what he has done for the city. He also talked of Mayor James Michael Curley, who was known as "the mayor of the poor."

"Give. Give back," Conley urged. "If you give back, it will come 100 times back to you."

"I went to the Agassiz, the Curley and JP High," Burke said. "We learned decorum, discipline, and do what you're told. Oscar Wilde said a school building should be the most beautiful edifice in the community. The worst punishment is if you couldn't come back."

Burke said he remembered his grandfather, Eddie Callahan, talking about the city changing around him and being unable to recognize it. He compared it to Boston's growth under the Walsh administration.

"I'm 76," he said. "Now I'm the one saying, 'I don't recognize this city anymore.'"

Francisco A. Urena, Secretary of the Department of Veterans Services, presented the Brigadier Gen. William J. Gormley, III, Civic Spirit Award to Jim Hennigan, a West Roxbury insurance agent and community activist currently helping to run the West Roxbury Business and Professional Association.

Before he did so, he gave a round of applause to the veterans in the audience. He also recognized veterans who were not there to celebrate and those who recently returned home, while paying respect to those who served in Korea and Vietnam, "who didn't receive the recognition they deserved."

Hennigan organized the Kettlebell campaign in West Roxbury for the Salvation Army.

"When I originally contacted the Salvation Army 16 years ago about starting the campaign, they said, 'That's great! What day?'" Hennigan said. "I told them, 'Every day!'"

He added that it means so much to him to see so many of his friends participate year after year. Yet the person who should receive the award, according to Hennigan, is his wife, Jude.

Hennigan also said that he accepted the award in honor of his dear friend and long-time community organizer, Mary Mulvey Jacobson, who passed away this May. Jacobson created the Families in Need program with the WRBPA to donate turkey dinners during the holidays, in conjunction with Ethos, to elderly and low-income residents. Hennigan, members of Jacobson's family, and other volunteers are carrying on the tradition, he said.

"This is an extremely important event that highlights what West Roxbury is all about," said Urena. "As a veteran, I was proud to present an award named in honor of a great local veteran."

"Frank Sullivan deserves a lot of the credit for helping the needs of West Roxbury," said Richie Gormley, the Lord Mayor of West Roxbury. "He helps so many families in need."

"This is such a huge community event," noted resident John Lohan of the award ceremony. "I know all of the award winners. The foundation does so much good work. One year they purchased a very expensive wheelchair for someone who really needed it. They focus primarily on southwest Boston, but have stretched out to Mattapan."

"The first thing I want to do is thank Frank and Lisa Sullivan for their hard work," said Conley after the presentation. "This event is something that brings everybody in our community together. This year's award winners are awesome people. It makes you proud to be a resident of the Parkway."
