Council looks to regulate dockless scooters, bikes

These dockless scooters are becoming such a problem in neighboring areas, and towns like Brookline or cities like Cambridge are impounding them.

The Boston City Council is looking to regulate dockless bikes and scooters.

District 6 City Councilor Matt O'Malley said the city needs to get ahead of the issue before discarded scooters and bikes become a problem on the city's sidewalks.

"It's an innovative idea that I want this body to really lead on and call a hearing on," he said. "Creating and sustaining reliable, equitable transportation continues to be a challenge we face as a city. Difficulty getting from here to there is one of the biggest issues we hear in our neighborhoods."

O'Malley said these modes of transport could help the city's traffic crunch and help areas traditionally left out of the MBTA's rapid transit system.

"Electric scooters are already appearing on our streets because residents use them to travel into the city. If we can coordinate the introduction of electric scooters into Boston and the surrounding cities we can ensure this new option becomes an integrated transpor-

Council looks to expand wetlands protections

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Boston City Council met last week with experts and city officials to start the process for drafting a new city ordinance to increase wetlands protection.

Currently, the Boston Conservation Commission enforces the state's wetlands protection act, but the council said it wanted to increase those regulations and possibly add more teeth to the commission's ability to enforce them.

Environmental Lawyer Pamela Harvey of the Massachusetts Association of Conservation Commissions said the first thing the city would have to look at would be the current state laws.

"First thing, the local bylaw or ordinance has to be different and be more stringent than the state standards," she said. "Conservation Commissions that administrate bylaws or ordinances, they're also administrating the state law at the same time."

Harvey said however that if the city wanted to expand the Conservation Commission's role, the commission would not have to hold separate meetings and thus increase burdens through bureaucracy.

"Typically you would think that would be very complicated but actually the permit process is done jointly so there's one hearing and the same sorts of things are taken into account,"

Despite all the alteration, Roslindale resident Chris Rice elected this year for his Eagle Scout project to restore the cannon at the Gardens of Gethsemane Cemetery.

The cannon itself, a replica of a 24-pound long gun, was originally on board the U.S.S. Constitution in the early 1900s.

The Hyde Park Branch of the Boston Public Library is looking to obtain funding from the Community Preservation Act (CPA) funds to help restore several stone figures on the library grounds.

The CPA allows for groups and residents to apply for funding for historical preservation, affordable housing or open space. Friends of the Hyde Park Library member Victoria Gall said they have also applied to give signage to a stone memorial for T.

RISE hosting second annual Summer Fiesta

Residents are gearing up once again for the annual RISE Fiesta.

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The immigrant advocacy group Roslindale Is for Everyone (RISE) is hosting its second annual Summer Fiesta Friday, Aug. 24 from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m.

According to organizer Sarah Byrne, the event is designed to promote inclusion in the neighborhood, much like the organization's efforts overall. Byrne said the group is acutely aware that in many neighborhoods, residents can and have lived all their lives without getting to know some of their neighbors, and she said events like this are designed to end that separation.

"In RISE, well our name is pretty clear as to what we're about," she said. "There's a lot going on politically, but it's really important to just reconnect with each other, that's what this work is really about.

We want to form a community that knows each other and can really take care of each other."

Byrne said the event itself will be at the District 35 Painters and Allied Trades Union at 25 Colgate Rd. According to the event flyer, kids and adults are welcome, the space is ADA accessible, and residents should bring a dish to share with the community. BYOB as well.

Council looks to decrease affordable housing vacancies

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Boston City Council held a hearing last week to address a growing number of vacancies within the city's affordable housing stock.

Chief of Housing and the Director of the Department of Neighborhood Development Sheila Dillon said the city has to go through the Affirmative Fair Housing Process, and with the current housing boom, the current process has been under a lot of strain.

"The problem is that the high volume of activity strained the existing systems and processes that we had in place creating the backlog," she said. "We had very few staff working, but they were working very very hard but couldn't keep up with the volume of plans coming at them."

Dillon said that since Boston Mayor Marty Walsh started the Inclusionary Development Policy (IDP), almost 2,900 new units of affordable housing have been created. She said the department is looking to complete the backlog and make the process of obtaining affordable housing easier for residents.

"In response, the mayor requested that DND and the Office of Fair Housing and Equity begin discussions to transfer their Affirmative Fair Housing Marketing Plan to DND on a pilot basis," she said. "That transfer took place on July 1 of this year. Since then DND, working with all of our partners have implemented a number of measures to work through the backlog and streamline the Affirmative Marketing Process."

The marketing plan would be submitted by the developer of a project and include the types of units available, their income restrictions, and how the developer would distribute marketing materials. DND has to approve and review each plan, which has created the aforementioned backlog.

She said DND has temporarily reassigned staff at DND to help with reviewing the backlog, and has currently four to five staff full-time working on the backlog. She said they have made changes to the housing database to track each project as it goes up and begin the marketing process as soon as possible.

"We've really looked at which projects are going to have occupyable units and prioritize those for review," she said. "In just the past four weeks, we have approved 18 marketing plans, 15 advertising strategies and three lottery results. The lotteries are a significant amount of work because as you're aware, thousands of people are applying for these opportunities. As of today, we have marketing plans under review for an additional 23 projects. Only one of those 23 have a certificate of occupancy in place, meaning all the other ones are still in construction, so we have time to complete our work."

Dillon said there are about 100 units of vacant affordable housing and that DND is getting the lotteries for those units sorted out. Hearing co-sponsor and At-Large City Councilor Annisa Essaibi-George initially called the hearing in July, and she reported the city had 839 units in 37 projects vacant. Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) representative Tim Davis said that number was based on projects that were in some stage of the review process at that time, which included projects that were still in construction.

"We have 103 occupyable units that are now starting the advertising process," she said. "We are making very very significant progress, but we know there is more work to do."

Dillon said DND is currently working on standardizing marketing plans and outreach material for affordable unit lotteries. She said they are also creating online applications for all projects to make applying for affordable housing much easier and has also created a website for the MetroList, a program which updates residents regularly on affordable housing opportunities.

"Since we have made these enhancements, subscriptions to the MetroList newsletter have more than doubled from 6,000 when we started to now more than 13,000," she said.

DND Deputy Director of Finance Rick Wilson said they would soon be sending out reminders to developers of their need to submit a marketing plan, as that doesn't always happen promptly.

"We asked the developers to submit (the marketing plan) well in advance of when it's expected to be completed, and that doesn't always happen," he said. "We have to improve that process so that we are aware when building permits are issued that we are reaching out to developers and marketing agents so that we can remind them to submit that plan and we can begin that review process."

Brian Engler of SEB Housing said his company has been hired by dozens of developers to work on affordable housing lotteries and said in the past, marketing plans took vastly more time to approve because of the limited staff before July 1.

"Up until a few weeks ago, it could take four to eight months to get a marketing plan approved," he said. "You could shave four to eight months off the process just by making the review of the marketing plan more efficient. After that, once marketing starts, there are not that many inefficiencies, you could shave a week or a month off there... with fine-tooth refinement, because when you get approval to market until you actually run the lottery, it's going to be about four months."

FALLING, BREAKING, AND RUSTING

We are falling apart.

There is no other way to say it. Years of denial are biting at us. We are watching things that should be “givens” become kick-the-can disasters.

Here in Boston, a weather cycle keeps sending rain our way. As a result city streets are flooded. The same story, on a larger and more severe scale, is tormenting flood-ravaged residents of Peabody and Revere.

In Scituate, if you turn on a water tap, brown junk trickles out. The response from officials: a shrug and assurances that the mud-water is safe to drink. Nothing quenches the thirst on a hot and humid summer day quite like a big glass of rust and sludge. They have it good though, compared to residents of Flint, Michigan.

The parking lot at the Alewife MBTA station is literally falling apart. It is highly-likely that others will crumble away as well.

All around us, things are falling apart. The reason why? Nobody wants to spend money on what matters. We prefer to illogically demand tax breaks and big money for pet projects.

Infrastructure upkeep, as we keep yelling about, is one of the few must-do matters on a local government's agenda, whether the problem at hand is a public or quasi-public one.

But why bother fixing things that are at the core of a functioning town and city when there are so many bright and shiny initiatives to worry about, from bike lanes to residential organics collection?

There is no need to raise property taxes to fund infrastructure improvements. We could find the money by temporarily having an austerity program of sorts. Preserve necessary services, but cut away expensive consulting programs, do-nothing jobs, and head-scratching overtime pay. Cut back on junkets (such as Mayor Walsh's laughable trip to Iowa to stump for Democrats and maybe, just maybe, announce his availability for vice president). Scale back non-essential expenditures until roads get repaired, bridges don't collapse, and water looks like water again.

Yes, some infrastructure projects are underway already. Their inconvenience will pay off in time. Too many things, however, fall into the “deferred maintenance” column filled on municipal spreadsheets. Political translation: “Let's not worry about it until the school roof actually collapses.”

Perhaps we are a broken record on the topic, but at all corners of government, state to federal, infrastructure is far more important than the big list of nice-to-have items, tax breaks, and flights of fancy like military parades and a “Space Force.”

Solve Job One; then move on to the pipe dreams. We will all be better off for it.

NEW SCHOOL A VERY DANGEROUS IDEA

To the Editor:

If the Mayor approves the new school on Belgrade Avenue without a traffic study, he will be shooting himself in the temple, not his foot.

What is the most dangerous stretch of road in the State of Massachusetts? It's the state road known as the VFW Parkway from Spring Street to Baker Street, 1.1 mile long. It has a minimum of 13 deaths in less than 50 years. In that time the state never identified any trends. Six male high school students have died, ages 14 to 19, a CM student going home from school at Spring and VFW Parkway, 2 in motor vehicles near the West Roxbury High School and an English High Student between VFW Parkway and Center Street. Two tragic pedestrian deaths at Healy Field and Gardner Street have happened. The Engineers say it is okay, yet 20% of all highway motor vehicle deaths in the USA can be laid at the doorstep of Highway Engineers; so much for Engineers. The State Legislature put in a bicycle lane from Spring St. to Baker St. with no breakdown lane for motor vehicles. How stupid; so much for Legislators.

LIBRARY FRIENDS SEEK INFORMATION ON STONE FIGURES

To the Editor:

Dear Friend of the Hyde Park Library, The Board of Directors has approve the submission of a funding proposal to clean, preserve and graphically display the history of the two stone figures of Mercury, and the stone memorial to T. Corrigan which have been on the side back lawn at the Hyde Park Library since the early 2000's. I have basic information from the donors but need more detail.

The carvings of Mercury adorned the old Hyde Park railroad station which was built in the early 1900's and demolished in the 1970's. I need information about the architect, date of completion, date of demolition, photos, anecdotal material, and suggested contacts.

The stone inscribed T. Corrigan, may be a section of the cornerstone of the former St. Catherine's School that was established in 1895. A parochial school is on a 1912 map at the corner of Washington St and Foster St, now Chittick St. It became St Pius X School for a while before it was demolished sometime in the 1960's or 1970's.

Thomas Corrigan, was likely a son of John Corrigan who gave land to Hyde Park in the 1840's, thus the Corriganville section of Hyde Park. Information about the stone is vague and unsubstantiated. Facts, photos and leads are needed.

Send information to this email address or to v.gall@yahoo.com. I look forward to fascinating facts and any help you can provide. I'll keep you posted on our progress. The Community Preservation Act application is due on before September 28, 2018 so there is urgency to my request.

COMMON SENSE BUILDING STRATEGY NEEDED FOR WEST ROXBURY/ROSLINDALE

Editor's Note:

The letter below is a newer version of a Letter to the Editor that the author meant to send to us last week. An older version was printed as submitted, and we have agreed to print the newer version of it. Thank you.

To the Editor:

We have lived in the heart of West Roxbury for over ten years. We love it here, and love the welcoming diverse neighborhood feeling it has. We have noticed lately a growing level of contention over the proposal to build a large new high school on the site of 361 Belgrade. This neighborhood is a quiet one, and not one that typically gets into political debates, but with this project, we are seeing the neighbors come out in full force.

The reason against this project is that this it is not an appropriate site for such a large school. We are not against a school being built, but we are against this particular site. The proposal is asking for building variances, edge to edge, they propose little or no outdoor space, it's right next to the train tracks which is it extremely dangerous for our kids. Many of us worry that this area does not have the infrastructure necessary to support it.

We really need more outreach in the neighborhood, and feel the public relations consultants are misunderstanding why the neighbors are against this and this misinformation is dividing the neighborhood. It is not only the concerns that the streets around the lot are congested during the school year rush hour but if you add a project with 855 additional people, the traffic will be at a standstill.

We also believe that the Belgrade Station is the smallest stop that we have on the Needham line, and it is currently not capable of handling that many children safely. The proposed kiss and drop area on Anawan Street, shares the street with a residential apartment building with their only exit on that street. Part of this variance land is deeded as green space which is critical for all of us.

We need a neighborhood strategy to build with common sense, and we need shared information and engagement with neighborhood. I think we are all hoping we can find a better, larger space for our children, so that they grow up and are safe when they go to their high school.

Corrigan, which has been on the back lawn at the Hyde Park Library since the early 2000's. Gall said they are also looking to install signage with exact dates on the stone figures and the T. Corrigan stone there to help educate residents.

Gall said the stone carvings of the Roman god Mercury were once a part of the Hyde Park train station when it was owned by the New York New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company. She said, however, that for a stronger CPA application, she needs a little help from the community. She is asking that anyone who knows about these stones, the carvings or the T. Corrigan stone, to reach out to her at friendshydeparklibrary@yahoo.com so they can make the application as robust as possible.

"The station we know was built in the early 1900s, and I'm working with the folks at the BPL and I put word out to the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company," she said. "Though that line and railroad track has had many company changes over the years"

Gall said they know the station was demolished for an MBTA station in the 1970s, though they do not have the exact date as to when the figures were carved or by whom. She said since the station was built in 1973, it must've been in that time that one of the owners took the stone carvings, but they are having trouble locking down the date. They were later donated to the library.

Gall said she may have found a lead on the stone carvings' origins. She said a friend directed her to the details of a station from the Bronx around the turn of the century in 1900. She said that station was designed by Cass Gilbert, a local architect, and that it looked like the Hyde Park station may have been designed by him as well.

"He designed a number of stations for the railroad company at the time, but only two got built," she said. "This one in Hyde Park looks amazingly like the one that's abandoned in the Bronx."

The other item Gall said they are looking for is information on the T. Corrigan Stone, which she has presumed to be Thomas Corrigan, the family of whom were prominent figures in the early to mid 1840s.

"There is actually a section of Hyde Park called Corriganville," she said. "Thomas Corrigan owned a lot of land in the area but he was also in construction. According to the donor of this piece, who has since passed on, it may have come from the cornerstone of the St. Catherine Elementary school that was up on the corner of Washington Street and Chittick Street.... There is a possibility the stone comes from there, but we won't know what's on the stone until it's raised up."

Gall said they do not want to excavate the stone, so she and the Friends of Hyde Park are asking the community for any information on that stone.

"The more detail the better," she said.

she said.

Harvey also said that since Boston is, for the most part, already developed and in the middle of a redevelopment boom right now, there would be considerations for the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection's (DEP) regulations under the Rivers Protection Act of 1996. She said the additional regulations of the act could compound any additional regulations for redevelopment from any potential new wetlands protection ordinance.

The council spoke to David Morgan, a Policy Fellow in Wu's Office and a graduate student at the Tuft's University Environmental Policy and Planning Program, and said he has drafted a possible wetlands protection ordinance over the last 10 weeks in anticipation of this hearing.

"It would enable the city's Conservation Commission to require climate resilience planning in its permitting decisions and ensure the city provide the best available science to make their determinations in terms of permitting," he said. "One step further, I had hoped to allow the city to pursue more green infrastructure projects with this ordinance, so, to the extent possible, I've included language that is enabling in that way."

Morgan said he would also want to strengthen performance standards for land subject to coastal flooding that the DEP may soon require with those standards are formulated, and added the ordinance would also address zoning concerns like size of a wetland, required setback from a wetland, the protective buffer the Conservation Commission currently requires, etc.

The City of Boston Commissioner of the Environment Carl Spector said the first thing the ordinance should look at doing is to expand the jurisdiction of the Conservation Commission. He said one way would be to include language regarding projected increases in flood plains due to climate change.

"Under the current law, if we moved it forward in time and depending on how one might define an expanded jurisdiction of the Conservation Commission to take into account projected sea level rise and projected areas of flooding, we could develop an estimate of how much land could possibly be under the jurisdiction of the commission," he said. "There are different ways of doing it. For example, some communities have simply changed their flood plain definition from the 100-year storm - the 1 percent flood change - to the 500-year storm, the 0.2 percent chance of flood as a mechanism for expanding what the Conservation Commission looks at, or to look at the way that certain wetland areas or certain resource areas might move with climate change and things like that."

Spector said that adding performance standards to development regulations under the Conservation Commission regarding flooding and flood mitigation would greatly increase clarity.

"Everyone would just know what's required and that would help both landowners in knowing what's required in their proposals and the commission too in evaluating proposals," he said, adding that zoning regulations should also be considered when creating the ordinance.

Roslindale resident and member of the Friends of the Allandale Woods Tony LaCasse spoke during the hearing and said he felt Boston was "way behind the curve" in terms of wetland protection.

"What we're seeing is that not only with respect to the development boom that's going on, particularly in the neighborhoods away from the water, there's a need for critical freshwater wetlands protection," he said. "Probably the three most controversial development projects in the last year in West Roxbury, Roslindale and Jamaica Plain have all been concerning wetlands areas that are being encroached upon by what is really unacceptable development proposals."

LaCasse said he wanted more regulations in an ordinance rather than in the zoning code, as variances have been granted in a way he feels is too cavalier.

"The culture of development has been so overwhelming in terms of city government that we're just seeing proposals that are outrageous if they were in any other municipality," he said. "What happens is that developers, even in their comments in public hearings talk about just going through the process with an expectation that whatever they propose in terms of building out 90 percent of a wetlands buffer zone would be normal and would be accepted."

LaCasse brought up the recent proposal for 1225 Centre St. in West Roxbury on the Roslindale line and the 64 Allandale project in Roslindale, for which his group is currently suing the city's Zoning Board of Appeals for its approval of the project.

"One of the things that I think will be important is that the ordinance will have extra teeth for the kinds of proposals like 1225 Centre that is immediately adjacent to one of Boston's last two vernal pools in Allandale Woods," he said. "64 Allandale is a project to build 18, $1 million condominiums immediately up-slope with about a 75 percent permeability coverage on a steep slope, that was granted 55 variances by the ZBA on a two-acre parcel."

LaCasse said those cases make an argument that the city does not have serious consideration, outside of the Conservation Commission (as the commission sided with residents on the 64 Allandale issue), in dealing with these issues.

"These are proposals that should not even be coming forward, because they wouldn't come forward in terms of any other development culture in any other municipality in the Commonwealth, but they come forward because one of the things that happens with wetlands is they're attractive places," he said. "In these cases we see that we literally have a willingness to love them to death for profit."

Ask The Doctor

Junior Damato began servicing vehicles in 1969. He owns a 10-bay auto repair service center in Hyde Park and an 8-bay center in Middleboro. Junior is an ASE-certified Master Technician, ASE-certified L-1 and ASE-certified Natural Gas.

To the Doctor: I own a 2011 Toyota Camry that has many rock chips on the hood. I tried using touchup paint and the paint does not seem to stay on. Do you have any suggestions for paint products that will stay on? I cannot afford to have the hood repainted at a body shop.

From the Doctor: I have tried a few different touchup paint products and the one that worked best on three different cars - and the paint color match was perfect - is from a company called Automotive Touchup. They send a complete touchup package with sandpaper, cleaner, applicators, instructions, paint and clear coat. All of the vehicles I tried the touchup paint on looked great and the paint stayed on all winter long. You can go online at automotiveTouchup.com or call them at 1-888-710-5192.

To the Doctor: I am interested in buying a classic car and wanted your opinion on going to a car auction, such as Barrett Jackson. Is this a good place to buy a car?

From the Doctor: There are many car auctions throughout the year hosted by various auction companies. Vehicles that go through an auction are usually pre-inspected and checked by the auction company. There are both buyer and seller fees that average 10 percent. Next, there are bidder pass costs, detail cleaning costs if the seller chooses, and if the seller wants to have the vehicle shown at prime time, this also has an additional cost. Plus, there is the shipping cost. Some auction companies will let the buyer put a reserve selling price on the vehicle.

There are many things to know and understand about buying a classic vehicle. Do not buy a vehicle from the internet without having it inspected before you pay for it. You should start by looking at whatever type of vehicle you want at online sites (such as Ebaymotors.com) and streaming car auctions. If you choose the auction route, you should buy the program guides and follow the car you are planning to buy. Going to an actual car auction is a lot of excitement for everyone involved. I hope you find the vehicle you want and enjoy it.

Boston's own Junior Damato, "The Auto Doctor" has agreed to field auto repair questions from Bulletin and Record readers. Please forward your questions to news@bulletinnewspapers.com and we will do our best to get your questions answered.

tation system across the region," he said. "These scooters provide a good experience to our residents and our cities since they provide convenient and nearly door-to-door transportation. They help folks get to a far off T Station, which is particularly noteworthy for the neighborhoods of West Roxbury, Hyde Park and Mattapan, where there is no close rapid transit system but many folks could use it to get there."

O'Malley also said the scooters would be beneficial to night shift workers, who have to commute at time when the MBTA does not run.

"And in cities like Seattle and Washington D.C., dockless transportation has also resulted in a reduction in traffic congestion and carbon emission," he said. "As we continue to face the effects of climate change it is vital that we create sustainable transit solutions that benefit our environment. From an environmental standpoint, dockless mobility does not require the construction and expansion of docks and could bring new funding to the city through revenue sharing with the electric scooter providers."

O'Malley said this is an extension of the Blue Bike program (ney Hubway) and if regulations are done right, it could be a boon to the city's streets (even though some are already here).

"For the last several years we've had a successful bike-share program," he said. "This is something I support. You are all invited to the first Blue Bikes station opening in West Roxbury to be unveiled at the end of this month. But many other municipalities and communities around Boston have dockless bikes and are exploring electric scooters. We see that with increasing frequency. You walk down Cambridge Street, you're going to see different bikes of colors other than blue that don't come with a docking station or can't be connected to a docking station on the street. You'll see some scooters with increasing frequency."

O'Malley said he knows there are clutter concerns, and stated that may other cities have just banned dockless transit entirely.

"Some what other cities such as Brookline, Somerville and Cambridge have done recently has been to outlaw them completely, which I understand that there are some concerns and outstanding questions, but I hope we can take a more proactive approach as it relates to Boston," he said.

District 3 City Councilor Frank Baker said he believes for the shorter trips it could help reduce the number of ride share drivers on the city's streets, but he did say that in California, the state is currently inundated with an excess of dockless bikes and scooters in key locations of the city. He said he felt that Boston could figure a way around this problem.

District 9 City Councilor Mark Ciommo said he recently returned from California, and said he is glad to see the city trying to get ahead of this issue before it becomes a problem.

"There were dozens scattered within a quarter of a mile," he said. "It just didn't seem to be regulation at all. That would trouble me if I saw that here... They were everywhere in a short span of the streetscape and it could create problems for people, pedestrians especially."

At-Large City Councilor Michelle Wu said she wants to tackle both the scooters and the bikes. She said the bikes are a bit bigger and could take up more space, whereas the scooters could fit in smaller areas, leaving less room for congestion, so she said she wants the regulations to take that into account.

BLAKE

Donald Edward, Retired BFD Age 83, of West Roxbury passed away peacefully at home with his family by his side, on the morning of August 10, 2018, after a long illness. Don was born in 1935 in Boston, where he was raised by his parents, John and Sarah (Cashin) Blake. He grew up in Roxbury and Dorchester, and later joined the US Army. He was a respected member of the Boston Fire Department. After meeting his wife, Mary C. (Devine) Blake, he settled in Quincy where they raised their family. He was an active member of Sacred Heart Parish where his daughters attended school. They later moved to Scituate where they enjoyed many happy years by the ocean, his favorite place. Don enjoyed working with his hands and was a talented carpenter and home inspector. He loved watching his Patriots and Red Sox games, but was happiest surrounded by his family, who adored him more than anything. He bursted with pride over them, his proudest accomplishment.

Donald is survived by his loving and devoted wife, Mary, four daughters, Kristine Donoghue and her husband, Chris, of Attleboro, Kerrin O'Connor and her husband, Brian, of Franklin, Maryellen (Maisie) O'Leary and her husband, Michael, of West Roxbury, and Colleen McCarthy of Norwood. He's the beloved grandfather of Brendan, Kolbe, Celia, Frankie, Sean, Jack, Blake, Ava and Jarrod Donald (JD). He is predeceased by nine brothers and sisters. Don's family would like to express our heartfelt thanks and gratitude to Lotty Menard for her loving care, as well as the Hope Hospice team. We are eternally grateful.

Family and friends honored Don's life by gathering at the Murphy Funeral Home, 1020 Dorchester Avenue, Dorchester on Tuesday. A funeral mass was celebrated in Saint Margaret Church of Saint Teresa of Calcutta Parish, 800 Columbia Road, Dorchester. Interment at Cedar Grove Cemetery, Dorchester. In lieu of flowers, remembrances may be made in Donald's name to Hope Health Hospice, 1324 Belmont St., Ste. 202, Brockton, MA, 02301, or American Parkinson Disease Assoc. MA Chapter, 72 E. Concord St., C3, Boston, MA, 02118. For guestbook, please visit www.jmurphyfh.com. Funeral Home.

ing to have salsa music and salsa dance lessons from Cornell Coley,” she said.

According to Coley’s website, he is a dancing educator who has worked for 25 years to bring dancing to anyone who will listen to the beat. He has toured worldwide with the “Uclatino” band in Mexico and the “Bodytjak” Indonesian-American ensemble in Indonesia. He has worked also to provide ongoing therapeutic drumming in the Vermont Veteran’s Home, Tewksbury Hospital, Butler Hospital and the Children’s Hospital. In October of 2015, Cornell presented a TED’s talk on Drumming and the Brain.

Byrne said the dancing is an integral part of the process of coming together with people, as dance and music are two art forms that can break the language barrier.

“When you’re dancing in a room with someone, even if you can’t speak the same language, you’re having a common experience,” she said. “It’s a way to connect with people you might not normally talk to, and it’s just something we can all share together. That’s where we’re coming from.”

RISE has also been working locally to keep immigrants and immigrant families safe. The group participated in the June 30 Immigrant Rally on the Boston Common, where thousands of activists and immigrants came to protest family separation. RISE also worked on the budget plan with State Rep. Jeffrey Sanchez, Chair of the Ways and Means Commission, too include immigrant protections in the Massachusetts State Budget, of which the State Senate and House of Representatives later dropped for fear of a veto from Gov. Charlie Baker. RISE is continuing to work for these protections.

Byrne said RISE is also working to find new leaders for the organization that has been running since 2016. The group will be confirming its new leadership team at the RISE Annual Meeting in October, but they need to know by Sept. 10 if a person is interested. Send information to rosлиндalrise@gmail.com.

Several of Rice's sister cannons in the Charlestown Navy Yard.

COURTESY PHOTO

Rice and his father, Derek, will be replacing the housing of the cannon this Saturday and will be sandblasting and repainting the actual iron itself. Rice said he and his father have put in hundreds of hours of organizing and work to get the project going, which first required a backhoe to take the cannon off its housing. An average 24-pound long gun weighs about 5,500 pounds, and it was a long process to get the gun off the housing.

"We lifted it up with a backhoe and cable," Derek Rice said. "That sucker is heavy."

Chris Rice and Derek said they have been working with gardens Director Alan McKinnon to house the cannon while it's being refurbished. Chris Rice said he chose this project because it was unique to the neighborhood and something he felt he could make his mark with.

"Originally, I was just looking around for an Eagle Scout Project to do, I just had to find a project because it was coming to that point where it was going to have to be now or never," he said. "I was here at the Gardens for the Blessing of the Bikes one weekend and, my dad and my scoutmaster, we were just kind of looking around at the cannon."

Rice said the three of them agreed the cannon seemed to have seen better days.

"We got to thinking man, this is in rough shape and it would be a cool idea for a project," he said.

Rice said that Eagle Scout Projects are to show leadership and organization to get many people to help better the community. He said he has seen smaller projects for memorial plaques or installing plaques warning residents not to dump in storm drains, but he said he saw a real opportunity with this cannon.

"A lot of projects can just be something small like a storm drain plaque or something like that," he said. "I kind of wanted to do something big, more fun and more interesting."

Chris Rice said they are using white oak and are in the process of forming the housing for the cannon and they are going to try to use as much of the original non-wooden pieces as possible.

"We're trying to use as many of the nuts and bolts from the cannon as possible," he said.

Rice said that he's had some help, however. For example, white oak isn't all too easy to find these days and the milling of the lumber had to be done safely and carefully.

"I've had some scouts from my troop help out and some adults, family members and my scoutmaster to help out," he said.

Rice said the idea of the Eagle Project is to show leadership skills in organizing many people around a single goal. He said though for this project, getting folks excited about a cannon from the U.S.S. Constitution, even if it was a replica, wasn't too difficult.

"That's one of the big things in Scouts, showing you're a good leader," he said. "So I have to organize everything and get people involved. I don't really know how to describe this experience, but it just feels special."

Rice also solicited help for the project during the most recent Memorial Day ceremony at the Garden, where members of the community came out and helped out.
