Couple looking to open cannabis R&D Site

Mattapan husband and wife team Leah and Sieh Samura are looking to open up a research and development office at 612 Hyde Park Ave. in Roslindale for cannabis product creation and testing.

The site, a small blue building sandwiched in between an auto shop and a residential building, would be essentially for cooking and producing products, and they said no growing or selling of product would be allowed under the license they are seeking.

“It’s a real small facility, so we look forward to working with the community and making products,” said Leah.

The couple were able to use a business accelerator grant from Sira Naturals to get their first product off the ground, and are working with the company, formerly out of Milford Massachusetts, to get this facility operating to begin creating products such as infused salves and lotions. Their first product, Purient Bedroom Cannabis, hit the shelves two weeks ago and Sira Naturals

WR resident running Boston Marathon

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

West Roxbury resident Dina Vargo said she’s run six marathons in the past, but the real big one has eluded her for years, that is, until now.

“I’ve only done some mid-sized cities and it’s been a fun way to see different places, but I think everyone wants to do Boston, it’s like the feather in the cap of all marathoners,” she said. “I mean it’s the historic marathon and you have to do Boston, every runner has to. For me, the timing was finally right and so here we are.”

Vargo is running to raise funds for Metro Housing Boston, a company working on the ground to raise money for residents in need of affordable housing. The nonprofit was founded in 1983 and works to keep people housed in the Greater Boston Area. It has raised millions for preventative services and representation of residents, and has had a team every year since 2006. Those teams have raised a combined $431,000 in 13 years, and Vargo said she wanted to do her part.

“I wanted to run the marathon for them because I know how important it is,” she said. “I work in the affordable housing industry myself, but not on the deep grassroots level they do, so for me it was a natural connection. If I was going to run for a charity, I was going to run for Metro Housing Boston.”

Vargo said after training and running six marathons, that part of the deal at least isn’t so difficult anymore.

New police captain addresses speeding, safety concerns at WRCIA meeting

Mary Ellen Gambon
Staff Reporter

About a dozen West Roxbury Civic and Improvement Association (WRCIA) members discussed their continuing concerns about speeding and pedestrian safety with Area E 5’s new police captain, Therese Kozmiski, at the meeting on Monday, March 11 at St. Stephen’s Church.

“I’ve always been on the street, and I’ve worked in almost every precinct,” said Kozmiski, a Brighton native. “I’ve always worked in a district, so I know the challenges of working in a neighborhood.”

One of Kozmiski’s priorities is getting new speed limit signs posted along Washington Street in the Grove Street area approaching Dedham.

“I have been working with the Transportation Department to get better signage,” she said. “I have ideas about getting the solar ones like you see in suburban communities. They are

She added that traffic and pedestrian safety have been her paramount concerns, especially since the death of Marilyn Wentworth last month. Wentworth was killed when she was struck by a vehicle at the intersection of Hastings and Centre Streets. It was the third pedestrian death in the area in less than a year.

“We’ve already had three deaths here,” one resident said. “There was a young girl and an elderly gentleman, too.”

There was good news in this part of West Roxbury, Kozmiski noted. Burglaries have

Council looks at use of public ways, 5K's and street fairs

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Boston City Council held a hearing last week to discuss rules and regulations regarding public, private and non-profit uses of public ways in the city.

The problem comes, according to District 8 City Councilor Josh Zakim, as an increase in events which make use of public land or rights of way (block parties, road races or parades) makes some areas of the city inaccessible too many times for residents to reasonably adjust their schedules.

"There's been a proliferation of fundraisers, walks, parades — some political in nature which obviously no one could have predicted after 2016," he said.

Zakim said he wants to know the framework of approval for these types of events and how residents are notified. He said he wanted to focus on how new events that residents of the area might not be aware of are approved and advertised, if at all.

Neighborhood Association of the Back Bay (NABB) member Elliot Laffer said the disruption in the Back Bay can be a serious problem if you live there and have necessary chores or errands to do. He said the lack of notice on some of the smaller and less well-known events can also create unnecessary problems in his neighborhood.

"When you have them for what seems like almost every weekend, for people who need the weekends to do errands they can't do during the week it can be very challenging," he said. "I remember I was coming home one evening when there was one of these 5K road races and I had to sit a block from my house for an hour waiting for the street to clear and I didn't even know it was coming, and I'm usually very informed about this sort of thing."

Laffer said there is a need for more of these events to be evenly distributed around the city and not just in the Back Bay.

"While we're a beautiful neighborhood, we're not the only beautiful neighborhood," he said.

Boston Mayor's Office of Tourism, Sports and Entertainment Director Kenneth Brissette said during the hearing that permits approved by the Public Event Committee (PEC) are required for any event seeking to use public land owned by the city, including roads.

"Whether that event is free or not, open to the public or invitation only, it doesn't matter,"

District 8 City Councilor Josh Zakim

he said. "It is still necessary to apply."

He said in 2018 the PEC oversaw the permitting of 568 public events in the City of Boston.

"That's throughout the entire city," he said. "In 2017, the PEC oversaw the permitting of 545 public events throughout the City of Boston."

Brissette said his office guides applicants through the process but does not issue any permits. He said various public institutions, like the Boston Transportation Department (BTD), the Boston Police Department (BPD) the Boston Fire Department (BFD) or the Boston Public Works Department (BPW) must approve these permits.

Brissette said the PEC also takes a look at the upcoming schedule to make sure there are not too many events scheduled in a brief period of time. He said that list is on hand any time someone makes an application.

"When we come to a meeting, we have an Excel spreadsheet of all events that are happening in the city, whether it's the Red Sox, the Celtics, the Bruins, any concerts at the Garden, any concerts at Fenway, all Parks events and anything that we do," he said.

Brissette said that they actually put a hold on new events after Sept. 15 because they already have too much going on.

"So we monitor that and we figure out whether a particular race is feasible," he said. "Since 2014, we have not added any new additional events on Comm. Ave. with the exception of a few one-offs that we did."

Zakim said notification can be an issue. He said the updates the BTD puts out for traffic advisories is useful, but he's concerned that it's usually the first notification he sees for a particular event in District 8. He said he'd like to see more cooperation with the Office of Neighborhood Services so these events could be included in the office's weekly newsletters as well as a notification system for all the neighborhood associations in each particular area. Brissette said this was something he would look into.

Chief Engineer for the BTD Edward Hesford said for any street closure, there is always a plan in place.

"The BTD, well we're always formulating the traffic management plans and the operational plans for a safe event, in coordination with the BPD, BPF, EMS, etc., so we have a nice working committee in special events," he said. "There's a lot of thought that gets put in with this, the whole team puts together that plan relative to roadway detours, impacts, etc., that potentially could come about and we want to keep the city open and viable."

Brissette said the application process is different for every type of event, but it always includes a site plan for the area designated for the event, insurance for any event on public property, designs for any temporary structures and review by all relevant departments before permits are issued.

He said once they have all those permits they need, they will go to licensing for final approval for an entertainment license or a special event license. He said for a road race, BTD Commissioner Gina Fiandaca has to sign off on the idea of the event even before any permits are applied for.

Boston Parks and Recreation Director Chris Cook said in 2018, 4,084 permits were issued by the department, and that 1,351 were for adult athletics, 991 were for youth athletics, 194 were for weddings and 17 were closings related to construction and renovations of the parks. He did point out that each permit was not necessarily tied to one event, like a little league could pull one permit for use of a field for a full season.

BUY YOUR WAY IN

The scandal du jour, and one that has Boston sharing the national spotlight, is a pay-for-placement scheme that allowed the rich and famous (emphasis on the former) to cut ahead of other students for consideration at prestigious colleges and universities.

Among the 50 people accused of the crime are actresses Felicity Huffman and Lori Loughlin, and fashion designer Mossimo Giannulli. They, and others, paid between $200,000 and $6.5 million to secure admissions for their kids. Among the schools targeted by the perpetrators and a Boston-based for-profit college counseling firm were Yale, Stanford, and Georgetown. Among the feats of trickery used were fabricating top-tier athleticism (via the magic of Photoshop) to entice coaches and athletic directors and hiring “proctors” to take entrance exams for the would-be students.

In a sad world of war and political divisiveness, Colleaguegate (ok, we just made up that nickname) is the perfect, gossip-worthy story to come along: it has shallow, cheating celebrities; millions of dollars; and a reason to rage about unfair systems that have it in for “the little guy.”

We do need to ask, however, why these crimes are a reason for all that aforementioned “rage”?

Let’s think this through: wealthy parents open up their bank account to ensure that their sub-academic offspring can attend college. How is that any different from standard operating procedure?

College is a business. Like all businesses, despite protestations of self-importance and attestations of societal improvements, these institutions exist to make money. Like any company in a capitalistic world, these schools are in a near-constant state of expansion, and

Is this any way to run a city?

- $684,000
- $677,000
- $577,000
- $536,000
- $494,000

Staggering numbers, right?

They’re even more staggering when one realizes that these are the 2018 salaries of the top money-makers receiving and then endorsing City of Boston paychecks. They are all police officers, who were reinstated and allowed to collect back pay, probably due to the kindness of mediators who enjoy reinstating “wronged” employees. Also, last year there were two salaries of other police officers netting more than $250,000 each.

I wonder if any of these recipients will have to redeem cans for nickels or cut coupons from newspapers. Nah, not a chance.

If such people are being reinstated by benevolent arbitrators, perhaps more scrutiny should be given as to why they were laid off in the first place:

were the offenses egregious or only seemingly so? Or maybe review the qualifications of the arbitrators.

If the city treasury had no control of these payments, it could have exercised more control of the buy-out of the former school superintendent’s contract, which netted Tommy Chang a whopping $450,000. And was there any oversight of a fire department employee’s netting $260,000 and a building inspector’s pulling in $10,000 less?

To those of us on fixed incomes, those struggling on Medicaid, those grimacing at having to throw an extra quarter in a parking meter for another 4 minutes, or those pining for an extra dollar for a tip when serving meals, the above people, in effect, had hit the lottery jackpot but, regrettably, at our expense: they’re making money off our backs, as our rising real estate taxes and rents reflect the city’s reluctance and/or inability to rein in expenses. But if they worked for Fidelity, Gillette,

My Kind of Town/
Joe Galeota

State Street Trust, and other private companies, more power to them; we would have no basis to begrudge their salaries, outside of pure envy.

Last year the city’s payroll was $1.7 billion, a huge 8.2% increase of $129 million over the preceding year. Ah, would that there be a plethora of municipal belt-tightening, indeed a lost art in these days when the city coffers are open for grabbing.

PROGRESSIVES AND PLASTIC BAGS

To the Editor:

A recent letter writer sang the praises of Boston’s city council for being “progressive” concerning the plastic bag ban. Let me challenge the “progressives” on the City Council and in the neighborhood: Ban John Henry’s plastic bags as well.

The Boston Globe not only uses plastic bags for its home delivery of its daily paper, it uses the plastic bags for its advertisements that it delivers unsolicited

"I have a $7,000 fundraising goal, which is pretty intense," she said. "I think I'm over half-way right now, but it's actually much harder for me than training for the marathon. I know how to train, but besides hitting up my friends for donations?"

Vargo said she's linked up with another member of her team to do trivia events and an author to talk at the Massachusetts State Library in the State House. Vargo is an author herself and discussed her book, the Hidden History of Boston.

"I've learned so much and met a ton of great people," she said.

She added that despite her past experience with marathons, she's still also looking for ideas to help improve her training, which is why she started boxing at the West Roxbury BoxSmith gym.

"It's just a great way to work your core and get those muscles you don't always but probably should concentrate on," she said.

Vargo said she started the book after working her other job running offbeat tours of the city, and also wrote 'Wild Women of Boston' in the same vein. She said a lot of the stories from the tours gave her ideas for the book.

"Right now I'm working on a tour, which will be the eighth one and we're doing True Lies and False Facts," she said. "I specialize in offbeat tours, so it's not so much like the Freedom Trail, but different sorts of stories. This tour will have stories, some of which are true and some of which are false, and the people who participate get to choose what they think is true and it's almost like a trivia competition. We get together and have a party and give out prizes to people who guessed best. The stories are just so bizarre and as they say, the truth is stranger than fiction. There are just so many oddball things here in Boston."

She acknowledged that putting many of the true stories in her book may be somewhat of an advantage.

"Just read the books and you will get some clues," she said with a laugh.

Franciscan Children's hosts mental health talk at Holy Name School

Ariane Komyati
Staff Reporter

Patricia Coffey, the Mental Health Education Program Manager at Franciscan Children's Hospital in Brighton, came to Holy Name Parish to give a presentation on March 7. Her lecture covered mental illness, specifically in children, fact vs. fiction regarding mental health, common diagnoses, consequences of untreated mental illness, and how to destigmatize conversations surrounding mental health.

Coffey explained that mental health is a very complex issue. "There is not one definitive cause," she stated. Biological, psychological, social, and familial issues can all contribute to mental illness. "Why should we focus on kids? Twenty percent of youth have a mental health diagnosis, fifty percent of all mental illness begins by age 14, and seventy five percent by age 24."

Coffey discussed key facts about mental illness. One fact is that people with mental illness are more likely to be victims of violence - they are victimized at four times the rate of the general public. "It is not a character flaw, and we need to talk about mental illness the same way we discuss other medical diagnoses, like cancer or diabetes," stated Coffey.

She also discussed common mental illness diagnoses in children - anxiety, depression, and attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD). Symptoms of depression in children include prolonged sadness or feelings of emptiness, guilt, restlessness, difficulty concentrating, changes in sleeping or eating patterns, loss of interest in activities, withdrawal from friends and family, and thoughts of death or suicide.

"Parents often ask me, 'How come I can barely get my son [who has been diagnosed with ADHD] away from video games? How come he can focus on video games, but not on other tasks?'" Coffey explained that children with ADHD often have trouble switching from task to task, rather than having a problem with focusing.

It can often be difficult to identify mental illness in children; this is due to the fact that some children may lack verbal ability to explain thoughts or feelings. The presentation of mental illness symptoms can be different for each child.

"It is important for parents to be within reach for their child. They should be receptive, and not say things like 'It's just a phase,'" stated Coffey. Reaching out to a doctor or pediatrician is also important. Common treatments include counseling, therapy, cognitive behavioral therapy, and psychiatric medication.

School failure, substance abuse, and criminal justice involvement are some of the many consequences of untreated mental illness. Fifty percent of teens with a mental illness drop out of high school.

Coffey also discussed youth suicide. "A common myth is that talking about suicide creates a suicidal ideation among youth," she stated. "This is not backed up with any evidence."

Suicide is the second leading cause of death for youth ages 10-19. LGBTQ youth are five times more likely to attempt suicide compared to heterosexual youth. When discussing suicide, it is important to be direct, listen and be supportive, and know when you should connect with a professional.

It is important to destigmatize conversations about mental illness. When discussing mental health, one should use respectful language (say "she is living with bipolar disorder" rather than saying "she is bipolar") and eliminate using slang or negative terms. Remember that a mental illness does not make someone less of a person or define who they are.

Franciscan Children's serves children and adolescents (ages 5-22) with complex medical, mental health and educational needs. They provide inpatient care, acute residential care, and outpatient care. For additional mental health resources for teens and parents, visit FranciscanChildrens.org/MHresources.

Council to look once again at homeless veterans

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

Almost three years since Boston Mayor Marty Walsh's action plan to end veteran and chronic homelessness announced that chronic veteran homelessness was ended, At-Large City Councilor Althea Garrison wants to readdress the issue.

Garrison said despite the work the city is doing, she wants to take it further. She said currently there are about 1.4 million veterans in the United State considered by the federal government to be at risk of homelessness due to poverty, a lack of support networks and substandard living conditions. She said she wanted to hold a hearing to ascertain the job the city is currently doing and to work with the Veterans Administration Hospital to improve the situation.

"While the VA has spent many years trying to address veteran homelessness, it remains to be seen how effective their programs have been, given the number of veterans living on the street in Boston right now," she said.

Garrison said they should be looking at connecting all of Boston's veterans to support programs and networks to reduce the chances of veterans becoming homeless. According to the government, a chronically-homeless person is someone who has been homeless for at least 12 consecutive months, but that doesn't mean veterans, single adults and families aren't experiencing homelessness. According to the City of Boston's recent homeless census, the city housed 181 families last year alone, dropping the homelessness population by 3 percent. The city has housed more than 921 veterans since the program started in 2015, but Garrison said many conditions, like post traumatic stress or wounds from battle, can make it difficult for veterans to hold down a job, which is why she wants to increase services.

Boston, according to the census data, is the exception to what's going on in the state. According to a 2018 report by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, the number of homeless veterans went up 15.5 percent in the state for the first time in five years.

District 2 City Councilor and veteran Edward Flynn said Boston has been able to increase housing for veterans through several programs and organizations like Caritas Communities and the Brighton development at the Brighton Marine Health Center (102 veteran-only housing units to break ground in the spring) are helping to alleviate those pressures, but he said the city can always do more.

Also during last week's meeting, At-Large City Councilor Annissa Essaibi-George called for a hearing in a late file matter to assess the safety of patrons at nightlife settings, after the abduction and murder of Jassy Correia.

"The current environment demonstrates the need for the City of Boston to take a more proactive role in maintaining public safety in night life settings," she said. "On Sunday, Feb. 24, a young mother exercised her right to go out at night and celebrate her birthday, but instead she was taken from us by a senseless act of violence. As we mourn the loss of Jassy, it is important to recognize that she is one of the many victims of violence. Just last month, a young woman, Olivia Ambrose, was kidnapped across the street from City Hall at Hennessy's bar. The only difference is we were able to find her alive."

Essaibi-George said the council should look at how it can help to address the culture of violence against women prevalent in American society and how to educate residents of the city on how to hold nightclubs and perpetrators accountable.

In other news, District 7 City Councilor Kim Janey and District 1 City Councilor Lydia Edwards called for a hearing regarding a biannual review of the Boston Employment Commission and the Boston Residents Jobs Policy (RJP) in order to schedule the first biannual review.

The RJP was first established in 1983 and maintains now that any private development project over 50,000 square feet have at least 51 percent of the total work hours in each trade go

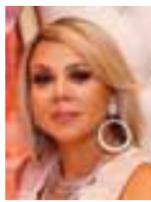

At-Large City Councilor Althea Garrison to Boston residents, 40 percent in each trade go to people of color and at least 12 percent in each trade go to women. Janey said keeping an eye on enforcing this policy is extremely important to help close the wealth gap in Boston.

"For the last 14 months since I've been on the job here, I've monitored construction jobs in my district, particularly those into the Roxbury area to make sure people are getting these jobs and we are falling short," she said. "The construction industry is falling short. We need to make sure, whether it's a union job or a nonunion job our people, our community, are able to participate in this booming economy."

Prayer to the Blessed Virgin
(Never known to fail!)

Oh, most beautiful flower of Mt. Carmel, fruitful vine, splendor of Heaven, Blessed Mother of the Son of God, Immaculate Virgin, assist me in this necessity. Oh Star of the Sea, help me and show me herein you are my mother. Oh Holy Mary, Mother of God, Queen of Heaven and Earth, I humbly beseech thee from the bottom of my heart to succor me in my necessity (make request). There are none that can withstand your power. Oh Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee (three times). Holy Mary, I place this cause in your hands (three times). Say this prayer for three consecutive days and then you must publish and it will be granted to you.
Grateful thanks. —A.R.

Miracle Prayer

Dear Heart of Jesus, in the past I have asked You for many favours. This time, I ask you this very special one (mention favour). Take it, dear Heart of Jesus, and place it within Your own broken heart where Your Father sees it. Then, in His merciful eyes, it will become Your favour, not mine. Amen. Say for three days, promise publication and favour will be granted.

Delivering the best since 1995

decreased since she became captain on the day before Thanksgiving.

"My goal is to improve your quality of life," she said. "My main concern is to keep you safe. I just want to improve the roadway itself and to keep the speed down."

A couple of residents stressed that drivers not only speed late at night, but also before and after school. This also happens on Centre St.

"They are going at least 40," one person said. "But when they get to Dedham, the speed limit changes to 25."

Resident Mario Durso suggested that, to combat the speeding on Centre St., an island be created to narrow the road.

WRCIA co-president Marty Keough added that pedestrians need to be vigilant when they are crossing the streets.

"Sometimes you see people crossing the street, and the light has changed," he said. "They are either looking at their cell phones or staring off into space."

Other neighbors advocated for stop signs and speed limit signs on private ways feeding into Washington Street.

City officials also addressed the speeding and traffic issue.

Jack Duggan, the mayor's liaison from the Office of Neighborhood Services, discussed the Vision Zero program. The program will be implemented to redesign roadways to increase visibility, reduce speed and increase safety for pedestrians as well as different types of vehicular transportation.

"The Boston Transportation Department is doing testing now," he said, noting the concerns of parents around the Beethoven and the Ohrenberger.

He added that Mayor Martin J. Walsh is considering lowering the speed limit to 20 miles per hour in residential areas from 25. This received backlash from the crowd.

"We can't even get them to drive 25," one of the dozen residents in attendance said. "That's ridiculous."

Shannon Murphy, the West Roxbury liaison for City Councilor Matt O'Malley added that the councilor hosted a successful community meeting concerning traffic issues attended by about traffic and safety concerns about two weeks ago.

"That was the best community meeting I ever attended," one resident said. "I really felt like we were being heard."

Some concerns raised that Duggan and Murphy said they would address included the possibility of additional crosswalks and signage.

"We only have one major crosswalk at Grove St., and it's diagonal," said Kathy Merageas.

Regarding crosswalks, Murphy noted that they only can be placed where there are curb cuts so they can be accessible.

"The problem with signage is that people request it, and we put it into BTM," she said. "Then others complain that it is too much."

Despite the speeding furor, Boston Police Department District E-5 Community Service Officer Edward Roach there were only seven robberies reported in the WRCIA area.

"On Feb. 11, at the Dedham Wholesale Tire, four tires were stolen," he said. "At 225 Partridge St., a victim with a camera caught someone stealing a package."

Roach added that "the best protection for package delivery is to use an Amazon locker or to have it delivered to a neighbor who will be home."

In addition, a cell phone was stolen out a person's sneakers at the West Roxbury YMCA on Feb. 17.

In a separate theft from the Y, "someone broke a combination lock and stole a wallet and a pair of sweatpants and used a credit card to make purchases," Roache said.

Electrical equipment was stolen from Rockingham Rd. on Feb. 26. On March 8, there was a larceny on Partridge St. of credit cards.

"There was also a report of a lost or possibly stolen property on Cass St.," Roache said. "The purchaser never got the package, but it was reported that it was delivered. But typically if you get the date, the company will replace the package."

Roche noted that, in the district over the past decade, part one crimes such as these have been at a "double-digit decrease every year for the past ten years."

When you think of that, it's really impressive," he said.

Noting the closeness to St. Patrick's Day, Murphy invited the group to join O'Malley to attend his Irish Flag Raising Event at Boston City Hall. This event will begin with a reception on Thursday morning, March 14th at 11:00 AM in the Piemonte Room (Located on the 5th Floor), followed by the Irish Flag Raising at 1:00PM on Boston City Hall Plaza.

"The guests of honor include representatives of the consulate general of Ireland in Boston, Consul General Fionnuala Quilan, and Vice General Aoife Budd," she said. "There will also be live performances from Annie Cheevers and Mack Geiss, dance performances from the Mary Heavey-Quinn Academy of Irish Dance, a capella performances by Boston Latin School Treble Choir and Boston Latin School Wolftones, and instrumental performances from the Boston Police Gaelic Column."

In other news, Keough announced that there will be elections for new officers at the next WRCIA meeting. He and co-president Timmy Sullivan have decided to step down once their terms end. "I've been doing this for three years, and I really love it," Keough said. "But I have a family, and it's time for some new blood."

He praised Sullivan for his technological expertise, getting the WRCIA a Facebook page and being dedicated to the group.

There will be no April meeting. The next meeting will be on Monday, May 13 at 7 p.m. at St. Stephen's Church in West Roxbury.

Chief Executive Michael Dundas said it is already doing very well in their stores.

“It’s doing very well and it’s only been a week,” he said. “It’s been an honor for me to work with these two in just the last six months. We had this accelerator program and we only took in three groups... Leah and Sieh were, I think, the first to be accepted.”

The couple said they would not require nearly as many deliveries as a retail shop, would have very few staff and no loud signage. Leah said they would have only enough product on site to facilitate their infusion projects, which would be kept in a locked pharmacy cage.

“We would also have electric locks, off-site monitored alarms, exterior lighting, a night vision cam with fill coverage, video access monitoring and recording and motion sensors,” she said.

Sieh said they would be creating recipes essentially to give to wholesalers to produce.

“We’ll be using the office for planning and recipe refinement to produce craft wholesale products,” he said. “We’ll also be using it for community relations, public relations, wholesale distribution training and education.”

The couple used a map during their presentation that showed the location is more than 500 feet from the Home for Little Wanderers and the Brooke Charter School, and more than half a mile from the proposed retail shops at 883 Hyde Park Ave. and the newly-proposed 721 American Legion Hwy. retail shop.

“It’s really an adult intersection, you’ve got a liquor store there, a gas station and an auto repair shop,” Sieh said.

Sieh also said the small staff and scope of the proposed business would not really affect traffic. He said they’ve been using the office now for three years for other parts of the business and their nonprofit company.

“We know the site really well, I mean we’ve been struggling to get the snow and ice out of there in this last storm, but we’ve been doing it and we know the neighbors really well,” he said. “We’ve heard no added concern. I mean, we’re not going to have delivery trucks pulling up all the time and I just want to reiterate, this is not a store, this is a place where we report to in order to build products.”

The pair said they would be working on installing a ventilation system as well to limit the nuisance of odor, and as they will be cooking they will be installing filters and vent fans similar to those one might find in a restaurant.

They said they would also be updating the look of the building during the renovation.

For the license, the pair are going through the process under the economic empowerment application, making them one of about 120 applicants. Sieh said they are grateful for the boost from the state.

The cannabis prohibition has been miserable, and a tragic failure due to greed and ignorance,” he said. “This is just my opinion, but if you have time I’ll defend it vigorously.”

Leah said she has been working in the nonprofit sector for about 20 years now as a certified tech trainer, working for the Urban League, the United South End Settlements and the WIC Center in Roxbury. Sieh said he first saw the potential for cannabis helping people when he returned from serving in Iraq in Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom in 2004. He said he returned to the United States with post traumatic stress and chronic back pain.

“I had some medicinal cannabis from my wife Leah and it radically changed my life,” he said.

The couple said they want to address the damage of the drug war by helping to move small business along in their community.

“This has made our neighborhoods violent with the drug ware, it’s made people distrust their healthcare system and even their law enforcement,” he said. “People like myself can see the prohibition as a miserable failure and something we have to proactively dismantle and take apart, because even after legalization, the stigma endures.”

Residents did not speak in opposition to the proposal, however one resident asked how the couple came up with the idea of Purient Bedroom Cannabis and if it actually works.

“It’s been 23 years we’ve been together, just come talk to me,” Leah said, with a laugh from the crowd.

2019 Mitsubishi Mirage G4 SE

Mitsubishi has been around for many years and in the early years, the vehicles were not good. Today’s Mitsubishi cars and SUVs are excellent in every way. I spent this week in a 2019 Mirage 3-cylinder, four-door sedan. This is a front drive, 1.2 liter, 78 horsepower, 3-cylinder engine car with electric assist power steering and a CVT automatic transmission. Surprising to me is that 78 horsepower moves the car right along, even with four adults inside. The car has a lot of standard features, including heated front seats – my favorite in the cold winter months. Push-to-start is also standard, as is fast entry steering hub controls, power windows, and a lot more. The exterior design is smooth – no sharp, crazy body lines – and vision is good from any angle. The car is quiet and smooth over broken pavement. However, there is the sound and feel of the 3-cylinder engine. This is no speed racer, but there is ample power from a stop or getting on the highway. Gas mileage is rated at 35 city and 41 highway, with 37 MPG combined. Not bad for a compact sedan. The car is built and assembled in Thailand. Warranty is 10 year/100,000 mile power train, 5 year/60,000 new car warranty, with 5 year roadside assistance. All this for a base price of $17,435 (destination fee: $895). Base price for the ES manual transmission is $14,645 for a brand new car, and this is before any discounts and special incentives are factored in.

this growth requires revenue. Tuitions keep spiking and assorted fees keep multiplying. For larger schools, even those with generous financial aid packages, endowments total in the tens-of-billions of dollars.

We can illustrate our point simply. A wealthy family wants their academically ungifted kid to go to their alma mater, so they hype their status as a “legacy,” capped off with a large donation for a library wing, planetarium, science lab, etc. That prospective student will soon have an admission’s letter in their mailbox, and the whole process is both legal and common among rich folks (see: Bush and Trump).

Yes, the whole admissions process is a scam from the get-go. If you don’t hail from wealthy stock, then start dribbling a basketball. The other express lane to most schools is to excel at a sport (be it football, baseball, basketball, field hockey, golf or synchronized swimming) and be willing to earn the institution notoriety and money while you toil under NCAA rules.

As for the testing that leads to the admissions process, it too is Big Business. Heck, we wouldn’t be surprised if there were kickbacks from the #2 pencil people to muscle out the #3 competition.

Yes, there is something noble about higher education, but don’t for a second lose sight of the mountains of cash made from issuing sheepskins and tasseled hats. No colleges seem to have knowledge or involvement with the pay-to-play admissions process that is at the heart of the recent controversy, but their legal business plans are not really that much different.
