The 42nd Roslindale Parade brings community together

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Roslindale Parade is an opportunity for residents of the neighborhood to come together and celebrate what makes Rozzie a real neighborhood of connection and community.

While thousands come out every year, not all of them still live in the Square. Dozens came back from their wild roving to catch up and see friends and family.

"We're both from Roslindale and it's like a reunion for me," said Mike Shammass, with his friend Jimmy Arsenal. "I figured if I came around I'd find someone."

Arsenal said he's been coming since the parade started.

The parade has gone on strong for more than 40 years, and residents feel that it will continue for another 40 years.

Friends of Allandale claim victory

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Friends of the Allandale Woods (FAW) stated last week that they won a small victory after the lawsuit against the City of Boston and the developer Wondergroup was allowed to continue, despite a motion of dismissal from the aforementioned defendants.

The lawsuit was filed after the City of Boston Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) approved a new development from Wondergroup at 64 Allandale Rd. Residents formed the FAW group to oppose the development, claiming the plan would cause a negative impact on the surrounding wildlife, vernal pools, density and traffic in the area (the proposal calls for 18 units on a two-acre property).

The motion for dismissal was not completely thrown out, as some of the motions survived. FAW member Tony LaCasse said some claims were dismissed because the judge wanted to focus on zoning issues alone, but that they could bring them up in later court proceedings.

"He basically pared it down to zoning issues on both sides," LaCasse said. "The thing to understand on this is most judges pare things down to what they consider the very narrow law to rule on."

Judge Paul D. Wilson of the Suffolk Superior Court decided that five plaintiffs did not qualify for legal standing in the case because they were not direct abutters. He also found that allegations of spot zoning could not be

617 City Kings bringing Lacrosse to Boston

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

While lacrosse has been in Boston arguably for hundreds of years, the sport has proved in the past to be difficult to reach for many in the city.

Some local schools offer it in league play but, for the most part, players have had trouble getting access to teams. West Roxbury resident Paul Sporn said he started the Parkway Youth Lacrosse league to help that, but they could only serve youths up to high school, and then they had to go to suburban clubs to play, sometimes hours away from the city. Now he and local resident Jack Piatelli have started the 617 City Kings Lacrosse club to give players a chance to embrace the sport closer to home.

"The idea is that we're going to be providing a club option for kids in the City of Boston, all those kids, once they go through a program like Parkway Youth Lacrosse, tops out when they complete eighth grade and there's no option for them in the city," said

At-Large council candidates debate

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The eight candidates for the four At-Large City Council seats came to the Roslindale Community Center on Tuesday night to talk about the issues currently facing the city.

Challengers Domingos DaRosa, Pat Payaso, Althea Garrison and William King spoke to questions from WalkUP Roslindale with incumbents Anissa Essaibi-George, Michael Flaherty, Ayanna Pressley and Michelle Wu throughout the night.

Payaso, who changed his name from Kevin McCrea, drew the most attention, arriving on his bicycle dressed as a clown with three balloons in tow.

“I’m running a very serious campaign,” he said. “Of course the media doesn’t pay attention to anything unless you dress up like a clown.”

Payaso however, stuck to many issues facing Boston, and said he wants to hold developers accountable to their promises to the city, but also to allow more development to occur. He said he feels – much like Mayor Marty Walsh – that increasing the supply for housing will lower demand and therefore lower rents. He also said that he wants to dismantle the Boston Planning and Development Agency, create an extensive rezoning for the whole city and to sell all unused city properties.

Payaso also said he wants to improve public transportation as much as possible through protected bike and bus lanes. He also wants to advocate for an expansion of MBTA lines, as well as for high speed rail in the Northeast Corridor running from D.C. to Boston.

Pressley said she has been and continues to want to focus on equity in access for city residents, and said transportation is one of Boston’s biggest social justice issues. She acknowledged the limited power the council has over the state-run MBTA, but said that bike lanes and dedicated bus lanes would be within its purview.

She also supports more multi-modal transit options in the city, for instance asking or requiring developers to not only put in parking spaces but also bike racks.

Althea Garrison described herself as the lone conservative candidate for the city council and, as a former state representative, wants to hold it accountable to residents.

“You have four At-Large councilors, one was newly-elected, and they all voted for pay raises,” she said. “That should have been a no vote. They all voted for pay raises and increased property taxes by 1 percent... I support traditional American families and I would like to see this country reverse.”

Garrison also said she was 100 percent in support of re-instituting rent control in the city.

“The high cost of living is the problem that the whole city faces, that is the reason I propose rent control,” she said. “We need to put some type of rent control in so that all of our citizens can have affordable housing.”

Garrison also said she would advocate for more bus routes in the city and also for more quality monitoring to make sure they are clean and more punctual.

Essaibi-George has been focusing on homelessness and education in the city during her time on the council. She said she wants to push for more requirements for affordable units to be built on new development sites, but she also said that sometimes taking money from developers in lieu of affordable units onsite can be desirable, because many times the funds are more than the cost of the housing itself.

She also said that the city needs to look more into leveraging its investment in the MBTA to get more favorable conditions from the state.

“It’s often overlooked that we as a city have committed and paid to the state almost $200 million for the privilege of having the T run through our streets,” adding that Boston is the economic engine of the state.

She added that the city should look more at neighborhood to neighborhood connections rather than just transit options to Downtown.

“Not all the jobs happen in Downtown,” she said. “We need to make sure we’re creating rings and not just spokes.”

DaRosa said he also would want to work on advocacy for the MBTA, especially for issues facing Roslindale and the southwestern neighborhoods of Hyde Park and West Roxbury.

“We should extend the Orange Line to Cleary Square, it’s as simple as that,” he said. “I would like to see not just increases in the number of buses but also another bus line that goes into different areas of Roslindale. There are many secluded areas of Roslindale and West Roxbury.”

DaRosa added that as a small business owner, he has to get large

Against the odds, Barton to run Tufts 10K

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

West Roxbury resident Ali Barton was diagnosed with a very rare heart condition at the age of 28, and was told by a doctor that it was likely she would never run again nor have children.

One son and one heart transplant later, Barton is gearing up for the 41st running of the Tufts Health Plan 10K for Women on the Boston Common. The event, set for this coming Monday, Oct. 9, is a celebration of health and fitness, which Barton said was perfect for her. She said her initial diagnosis was particularly painful, as she had been a psychotherapist and worked in fitness her whole life to help people with chronic illnesses overcome physical limitations.

"It's a pretty incredible feeling, I think the last few years have been incredibly challenging for me, not only because of the heart failure, but because my background is in fitness," she said. "That was a huge part of my identity; to have that suddenly ripped away from you is really traumatizing, but to be back here is pretty awesome.

Ali Barton will be running in this year's Tufts Healthcare 10K for Women at the Boston Common after persevering through many diagnoses.

I'm still not in the same shape as I was before I got sick, but in general it feels really good to be back."

The Tufts 10K was Barton's last running event before she received the diagnosis. Initially, she was told she would not be able to have children. At 21 weeks pregnant with her son Ethan, doctors told her she needed to abort the pregnancy or both she and her son would die. She decided to continue the pregnancy, had Ethan (who is now a healthy 3-and-a-half-year-old) and underwent a heart transplant six months later.

She said she has since joined the running group

OVERCOMING ARTHRITIS LIMITATIONS

Nearly half of individuals aged 65 years and older have physician-diagnosed arthritis. While this inflammatory condition can be managed with pain medication, there is also evidence that regular activity can help older adults with arthritis stay independent. How much activity is necessary, you may ask? Even though federal guidelines recommend 150 minutes of moderate exercise per week, few older adults with arthritis can meet this standard. Fortunately, researchers have found that osteoarthritis sufferers between the ages of 49 and 83 who engaged in only 45 minutes of moderate activity per week were 80 percent more likely to improve their walking speed and ability to perform light activities. This is encouraging news for arthritic seniors who want to stay mobile.

The goals of arthritis treatment are to reduce joint pain and inflammation, while improving and maintaining joint function. Staying vital and living well are achievable goals at DEUTSCHES ALTENHEIM. Please call to schedule a consultation and tour of our senior community at 2222 Centre Street, West Roxbury by contacting us today. "Ask about our Schrafft Pavilion for Alzheimer/Dementia Care and Edelweiss Village."

P.S. Physical activity and exercise help combat arthritis by strengthening the muscles that surround the joints and relieving pressure on bone and cartilage.

Editorial

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO PEACE AND JOY?

We initially resisted using this space to discuss the evil, horrific mass slayings in Las Vegas.

Inside baseball: routine writing about a tragedy of that sort is easy. Recount the events, express a carefully balanced recipe of sympathy and anger, and top off with a healthy dollop of “thoughts” and “prayers.”

As formulaic as that sounds, the exercise isn’t necessarily banal or uncaring. The sad reality is that events of this sort have become so routine and common that patterns have emerged.

The aftermath of recent events, as easily predicted, is a political debate. In one corner, anti-gun forces with unrealistic expectations of how legislation might stop events like this from happening. The other side, just as stubborn and foolish, will defend any, and all, personal weaponry as vital to their vision of the American way of life. It is telling that NRA-fed Congressmen had to yank a bill legalizing gun silencers at the last minute, lest the optics do more harm than good.

This space, today, isn’t about the Second Amendment. Feel free to continue the terrible dance that strikes up the band after every spree killing on your own time. What distresses up is a far more fundamental question: “Why?”

Terrorism, foreign or domestic, is easy to figure out. There are agendas, philosophies, religious fervor, and blind allegiance to dissect. Evil permeates the agenda, but there is at least some sliver of comprehension to be extracted and inform the battle. An act like this, as random as it is premeditated, is beyond any simplistic analysis. What happened in Vegas is too methodical to excuse as mere insanity, yet too insane to ascribe to religion or politics. Terrorists, although not always in time, can tip their hand. How can a crisis be averted when perpetrated by an otherwise indistinct American holed up in a hotel in a city that prides itself on anonymity?

What is it about our society where such brutality is becoming so common? What can we do when, in addition to grand scale acts of violence, there are the daily terrors of random crime? Every day young men are killing each other in inner cities. Every hour, someone dies by knowingly pumping their blood full of deadly drugs.

Console yourselves if you must with the busy, repetitive work of defending and attacking firearm laws. Offer all the thoughts, prayers, condolences and Facebook offerings of “white light” that make you feel better. None of it matters. The nihilistic reality is that records will be broken. More men, women, and children will die in ever-increasing numbers because someone read a holy book a certain way, or had deadly delusions of grandeur. The thing we pray will never happen again will, indeed, happen again until the incomprehensible cycle is broken.

Everything these days seems predicated on anger. Politics. Neighborhood squabbles. Bullying. Police relations. Even sporting events inspire outrage, sometimes before the game even starts. Something must give. “Let there be peace on earth,” a popular church song urges. More importantly, is the refrain: “And let it begin with me.”

How Boston is helping the people of Puerto Rico

Our thoughts and prayers continue to be with the people of Puerto Rico, those who live here and those who are on the island, as they recover from the devastating impacts of Hurricane Maria. I am incredibly proud to share that we are stepping up as a City to support them in their time of need. Together with The Boston Foundation, we have established the Massachusetts United for Puerto Rico fund, a fund that is dedicated to the relief and reconstruction of Puerto Rico and will support any Puerto Rican person arriving in Boston and the Commonwealth who have been impacted by Hurricane Maria. I encourage residents to visit <https://tbf.org/puertorico> to learn more about the fund.

Together we are sharing the important message to the people of Puerto Rico that we are here to help, for as long as they need. In Boston, we have a strong Puerto Rican community made up of over 32,000 residents. These residents, together with our greater Latino population, make up nearly 20 percent of our City.

In Boston, we know that our strength lies in our diversity. We take pride in being a City made up of people from all different backgrounds, representing many ethnicities and cultural heritages. Diversity shapes our neighborhoods and our identity as a City.

That’s why this month across Boston, and across the United States, we are celebrating Hispanic Heritage Month, honoring the important contributions that members of the Hispanic community that have helped shaped Boston to be the city it is today, having influenced every sector of Boston life, from our culture, to our industries, to our economy. Hispanic heritage is an important presence in our civic life, and is an ever-growing part of Boston’s strength - today and in the future.

We’re doing everything we can to support the needs of the Hispanic community, and all the communities that make Boston such a thriving city. That’s why we’re working together to make sure that every decision we make, we make together. From early education to senior services, we will continue to build a Boston for all.

We will continue to empower the Hispanic community, as well as the strong diversity within the Hispanic community. In this time of national division, cities need to step up as leaders. That’s exactly what we’re doing in Boston. We stand for all our people. We stand for the diversity that makes our City great, because Boston is a city for everyone.

And we will reach beyond our borders to show the same level of support and compassion for the people of Boston with those in need in other parts of the country. We will lift the people of Puerto Rico up through this hard time, and will support them every step of the way. The people of Puerto Rico will always have a friend in Boston.

Please visit boston.gov/relief-efforts for more information about Boston’s efforts to support Puerto Rico, or visit <https://tbf.org/puertorico> to donate.

Italians don't get no respect

This upcoming week, always at the beginning of October, is the usual time for bashing Italians.

But don’t bash the title of this piece because I already realize there’s a purposeful grammatical mistake in the title: the somewhat insidious double negative.

Very few will argue that Christopher Columbus was the first one to land in the New World. Maybe these few are the type who argues against global warming.

Archeologists make the sound case that the Vikings and perhaps St. Brendan were the first Europeans to land here. Some, and I say some, anti-Italians delight in veritabily trumpeting this not-so-new revelation.

And then there is the case that Columbus brought all

My Kind of Town/

sorts of trouble to the Americas - disease, racism, murder, etc. This is not doubted, but who is to say that other European explorers would not have done the same?

Of course, if Columbus had not “discovered” America and opened up the trade routes (and assuming nobody else did), all of us with European ancestry would not be in the United States; we would be squeezed into Europe and everybody with Asian ancestry would be on the other side of the Pacific.

The good news is that there would have been no slaves imported from Africa. Some 12.5 million were shipped to the New World but, according to Harvard Professor Henry Gates, only 388,000 did arrive in the United States, the rest to the Caribbean and South America.

Italian-Americans have made their way to the Cap-

Run for Tighe coming to Rozzie for second year

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The second annual Run for Tighe is returning to Roslindale this year at the Green T Coffee Shop on Oct. 15 at 9:30 a.m.

The race is run in memory of Tighe O'Brien, the son of Tony and Reiko O'Brien, who passed away suddenly from Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS) on Aug. 10, 2015 at 4 months old.

"Tighe was so loved, he was our world. We are determined to try and turn this devastating experience into something positive in his name," the couple wrote on their website for the event.

According to the Mayo Clinic, SIDS is the unexplained death, usually during sleep, of a seemingly healthy baby less than a year old. SIDS is sometimes known as crib death because the infants often die in their cribs. Although the cause is unknown, it appears that SIDS might be associated with defects in the portion of an infant's brain that controls breathing and arousal from sleep. The Run for Tighe will benefit research in these areas through the Boston Children's Hospital.

The O'Brien's currently own and operate the Green T Coffee Shop, and Tony said at the event last year, the outpouring of support from the neighborhood was amazing.

"It was unbelievable. I was watching them run up the hill after the race had started on Walter Street, and the hair on the back of my neck stood straight up," he said. "I saw each head bobbing up and down and I thought, 'each one of them is here for Tighe. Wow, we did this.' It was powerful."

O'Brien said last year they had about 350 runners and are expecting the same numbers again. He said they raised more than $22,000 for SIDS research at the Boston Children's last year.

"It was really great, the whole community in Roslindale is fantastic and they really pitched in," he said. "It's a really nice place to live."

O'Brien said this year there will be a good number of medals up for grabs, as they are giving out awards based on age brackets.

"There's first places for a lot of different categories, male and female over 70, 60, 50, all the way down to kids under 12, so there's a lot of first place medals out there, which is nice," he said. "We're also doing a raffle, so loads of people will get gift certificates for the coffee shop. We'll just pull numbers out of a hat, so the number you have for the race will get you certificates and gifts and that kind of stuff."

Losing a child is arguably one of the worst experiences a

The parade attracted hundreds and featured dozens of marching bands and military representatives.

“It was in the ‘70s, so we used to come here and then go to the Arbs (Arnold Arboretum) and hang out; and over the years we’d come back, our friends would come back with their kids,” he said. “Now they come back with their grandkids, and a few more years we’ll be coming back with our great-grandkids.”

And it’s a tradition that stays true even for younger residents.

“We’ve been here every year, we love Roslindale and it’s the best day of the year,” said student Liz Sanchez.

Her friend Lorraine McElligott said there wasn’t much that could keep them from coming.

“We used to come back from college every year,” she said. “It’s a great parade.”

Resident Bryan Ross said it was also a great time to come out and meet those new to the neighborhood.

“It just really brings the community together you know?” he said. “So far it’s really off to a good start, there’s great weather, and the mayor’s here as well.”

New resident (by Roslindale standards) Kim Fanning said it was her first parade, and it has been quite an experience for her.

“I’ve only lived here five years, I’m new, but I think it’s really cute,” she said. “I think they represent a lot of different things in the community, and I think the kids love it.”

Dozens of community organizations, military marching bands, school marching bands and the ever-popular Shriners came through the neighborhood to strut their stuff and show Rozzie pride.

The parade also featured Boston Mayor Marty Walsh, as well as District 5 City Councilor Tim McCarthy, District 6 City Councilor Matt O’Malley, At Large City Councilors Ayanna Pressley, Annissa Essaibi-George, Michael Flaherty and City Council President and Roslindale resident Michelle Wu. State Reps. Liz Malia and Edward Coppinger also took part in the event with State Sen. Michael Rush as well.

The Grand Marshall of the parade this year was Glenn Williams, who while working as the music director for the Sacred Heart School in the neighborhood – which celebrated its 100th year this year – has been able to also volunteer at countless Roslindale events and started the neighborhood’s iteration of the Roslindale Porchfest, which hit the neighborhood recently for its third year.

trucks through the city’s streets, and the main streets – especially those in Hyde Park and Roslindale – are sometimes too narrow for the large vehicles to navigate. When a bus comes up against one of his trucks, it’s an additional 15 minutes of traffic for everyone involved.

DaRosa also wants to look at housing reform, and said though rent control is a very touchy subject he wants to try to figure out a method to fix price gouging by landlords. He said perhaps increasing the lease times from six months to more than a year could help.

“It’s tough to keep yourself in residence when your landlord wants to raise the rent every six months,” he said.

DaRosa also said that he would advocate for creating a new tax structure where an owner-occupied rental dwelling would get different taxes than an absentee landlord and also create a structure of percentages that would dictate rent increase rates.

Wu also said that the MBTA needs more advocacy for reform.

“It’s the first way that communities get left behind,” she said, adding that schools and public safety come in below transportation and commute time when it comes to economic mobility data.

She also said she wants to advocate for more renewable energy, and in this way get the Community Choice Energy Aggregation ordinance through the council (it’s currently in the hearing stage). She also applauded the East Roslindale neighborhood for its successful application to the city’s Slow Streets program, and said she wants to advocate for more funding so that all neighborhoods could get Slow Street improvements.

King said he wanted to work on jobs in the city, specifically to increase the number of vocational options for students in the Boston Public Schools, especially in the wake of GE moving to the city and the possibility of Amazon calling Boston home. He said he agreed with DaRosa in expanding the Orange Line, and said he wanted to work on creating a dedicated bus lane and bike lane on Washington Street in Roslindale. He said he also wants to increase parking requirements for new developments in the city.

Flaherty said he wants to also work on creating sensible development within the city, and pointed to his opposition of several developments in the Parkway he said both he and residents felt were too dense or taxed too much of the local infrastructure. He said he also wants to look into creating more municipal parking within the city, as well as continuing his campaign against handicapped parking placard fraud, an issue he has been fighting in the city for years.

Council to look at short-term rental processes

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Boston City Council voted last week to approve a call for a hearing from District 8 City Councilor Josh Zakim to go over the review processes for new developments looking to market short-term rental spaces like Airbnb.

"This hearing order is the result of several things that have been happening, around the city but in particular form the neighborhoods I represent," he said.

Zakim said many neighborhood organizations, including the Alliance of Downtown Civic Organizations and many others, gather data and organize around the problem of short-term rentals.

"This hearing is intended to look at a specific aspect of this and when we have large-scale development projects that are working their way through their review process – the Boston Planning and Development Agency's Article 80 process – there have been some claims that folks are planning to mass lease a significant portion of the units they're constructing to short-term rental operators," he said. "While this certainly isn't something we're specifically looking to prohibit, it's something where it's important that we have the transparency in the review process that we know if a building is to have 250 units, and 50 of those are going to be set aside for short-term rentals, that has a real impact on the neighborhood and on our city as a whole on our tight housing market."

The council also unanimously passed a resolution to urge the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency (MEMA), the City of Boston's Office of Emergency Management Department of Neighborhood Development and other departments of the City of Boston to immediately coordinate with Boston area churches, humanitarian organizations and other community actors involved in relief operations in Puerto Rico.

"We must live like angels and produce like the devil," District 9 City Councilor and motion sponsor Tito Jackson said, quoting the first governor of Puerto Rico Luis Munoz Marin. "I believe this is critical in that what we are looking at is 100 percent of the power grid in Puerto Rico is damaged... We need to wake up and learn that this can happen in the City of Boston, but in this time right now, we need to understand that the State of Massachusetts has 266,000 Puerto Ricans. The City of Boston from the 2010 census has 30,500 Puerto Ricans, and Springfield has 50,000 Puerto Ricans."

Jackson also reminded the council that Boston will be receiving thousands of Puerto Ricans.

"People are coming to Boston, and we need to treat this like the earthquake in Haiti, which we know put a great deal of pressure on our schools, on our housing infrastructure, on our churches and our charities," he said. "It also means we need to treat it like Hurricane Katrina, where there are still people who are Katrina refugees, who are living in the City of Boston. People are coming with nothing, simply what they have on their backs."

At-Large City Councilor Ayanna Pressley also brought forth a motion for which the council voted to approve to accept a grant of $857,675 for the FY 18 SuccessLink employment program, formerly known as Youth Works. The SuccessLink program places at-risk youth in jobs at community-based organizations across the city.

"During our budget process, we all advocate vigorously for summer jobs because we all see the value in this program," she said. "As the summer comes to a close, the Department of Youth Engagement and Employment needs this grant to be approved by our body as soon as possible to ensure this program can be effectively completed for this fiscal year and continue for the next fiscal year."

Mama Beasts which participates in local runs in the Parkway, like the Corrib 5K. She said it's a great experience that allows her to socialize with other mothers while getting in shape.

"It's just such an amazing community of moms and it's how I socialize and get my kids out and stay active," she said, adding that without that support from the other mothers, she would have been hard-pressed to do the 10K. "They kind of pushed me to train for it and it's been going very well. A bunch of us will be doing the race, too, so I'll have some friends there."

Barton said she's been working very hard to get back in the swing of things for the event.

"I am more active than I've ever been in my life, and I'm surrounded by love and blessings," she said. "I told myself that after my heart transplant I could get through anything. I try to not sweat the small stuff now."

She said though she's more active, she tries not to have as much intensity in her workouts, at least for the time being.

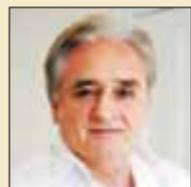

"I had always put a lot of pressure on myself to do well in terms of timing and all that, so I'm not going to focus on the time and just have fun," she said, adding that her condition makes her wary of over-exertion. "I think I'll always worry, you know heartburn is never heartburn, fatigue is never fatigue, you always worry. I had some training runs where I didn't feel good, and it can turn into 'oh God, is something wrong?' But that's the nature of transplant; you always worry about every little symptom... I'm definitely training, but just taking it easy. Back in the day I would teach high-intensity fitness and then go for a 10-mile run."

applied, as the 51 variances granted for the 64 Allandale proposal did not actually change the zoning laws of the area, which Wilson said was the definition for spot zoning. However, Wilson did allow the proceedings to continue based on the impacts the development would have on traffic, density and zoning. One aspect of that part of the case is that for a variance to be granted, hardship has to be shown by the developer, which residents and FAW contend was not adequately addressed.

“We consider it a victory,” LaCasse said. “The heart of the issue is still trying to put 18 units on two acres zoned for single family... The judge was saying we’re not arguing the merits of the case on those issues, but rather on the decision-making process to approve such density.”

The FAW coalition has stated it may request a motion for summary judgment, which would allow Wilson to decide the case with additional affidavits from both sides. They stated they might also go for a full trial or just ask the development to be withdrawn outright.

FAW member Wilfred Holton added that they will try to bring the case back on appeal for environmental issues later if they cannot stop the development through those means.

“The deforestation of the 64 Allandale property will be extreme if the 18 condo units are built on the sloping lot,” he said. “Most of the larger hardwood trees will have to be removed to build the three connected rows of buildings parallel to the slope, and the curving driveway that will wind down the hill. Also, the plan for electric panels on the roofs which will require removing trees that would cast shadows there.”

Holton added that the additional traffic from the development would be a detriment to the neighborhood and increase danger for workers and patients at the nearby Faulkner Hospital.

“The traffic dangers on Allandale Street will be greatly increased with over 40 cars parked on the property entering the street just east of a sharp curve, causing a blind spot, especially for cars coming from the west,” he said. “Now there is heavy traffic during rush hours because the street is a major cut-through for commuters. The legal speed limit of 30 mph is regularly exceeded, and the Boston Police are never seen giving speeding tickets there. More serious accidents are sure to occur if the development is allowed.”

person can face in their lifetime, and O'Brien said it wasn't easy, but said they had help from the community to get through such a tough time.

“We got the keys of the coffee shop to start the renovation on Aug. 1 of 2015, and Tighe died on the 10th of August, so it kept us busy after he had passed,” he said. “It was a distraction for us to help us through our difficult time.”

Sporn. “Now we have a city option for residents of the city.”

Sporn said giving better access to the sport will not only allow players to continue with easier travel times, but also allow them to really develop as players. West Roxbury resident, Parkway Lacrosse Alum and current Marquette Golden Eagle player Tommy Von Den Benken said he would have loved to have a local club when he was coming up as a player in the city.

“When I played for my club teams, I would travel like an hour and half to go to practice and we’d only have practice once for the whole summer, like a camp,” he said. “But if I played for somewhere inside Boston I could’ve gotten to practice like twice a week and actually gotten to know my teammates. I didn’t get to know my teammates as well as I could have. I just played with them at a practice for a weekend and then tournaments, sometimes with kids I don’t even know.”

Von Den Benken said he believes the program will take off, as there are definitely tons of kids in the city who want to play.

The 617 City Kings lacrosse club is coming to Boston and is purportedly the first for the city.

COURTESY PHOTO

“I know in the Parkway there are probably a lot of good skilled kids, and then they’re all going to want to try to make the team, especially with the sport growing as it is, they’re definitely going to want to play with the Kings,” he said.

The Kings will set up shop at the Roxbury Latin campus in West Roxbury, which Von Den Benken agreed would be much closer to all of Boston than his other clubs. Von Den Benken also said that he worked with Sporn for many years, and trusts the players will get a good education in the sport.

“I had Paul Sporn as a coach most of my career. He was a great coach, he knew what he was talking about because he played in college and professionally, and he was helpful in getting me on the club teams,” Von Den Benken said. “I’d say he was one of the best of helps to get me here playing at Marquette. He got me big into lacrosse, as at first I was playing baseball and lax, but eventually I decided I liked lacrosse way better and that’s probably all because of Parkway Lacrosse and Paul.”

Sporn said the clubs work more like Legion Baseball than normal sports teams dedicated to a single municipality or school, but added that the schedule should not interfere with school teams, if the player can do both. He said the experience for the players will be unique, as they get to travel all over the place.

“So there are tournaments in the fall and in the summer where club teams from all over the east coast will come to Philly, Baltimore, Upstate New York, Providence, and this is the primary avenue for kids to get looked at and be recruited for college,” he said. “What we’re hoping to provide kids with is an opportunity, but the kids obviously still have to do the work.”

Piatelli said he’s thinking about the coaching for the players, and though he sees some challenges ahead, he feels they are more than ready.

“Obviously I think there will be challenges in the inner city. I think number one probably is the game itself, how familiar the kids in the City of Boston and the familiarity of the game and the opportunities that come along with the game,” he said. “I’ve been very blessed in the lacrosse community since high school and traveled all over the country and coached at every level. There’s obviously also the cost to play, we’re going to do our best to make it affordable for these kids, but we have costs to run the business, coaches, fields, insurance and everything that goes along with running the program.”

Sporn said they are hosting a free clinic on Oct. 21 from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the Reservation Road Field in Hyde Park, as well as tryouts on Oct. 28 and 29 from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the Roxbury Latin School in West Roxbury. tol but not to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. One recently made it to the West Wing for a week or so, Anthony Scaramucci.

A writer for the Globe, Joan Vennoch, made the point after the Scaramucci debacle several months ago that political correctness would have inhibited comics and news writers from poking fun of him and his nationality if he were of another heritage. She might be correct.

This is not to say that many of us Italians (I'm half Irish, with four grandparents from Kerry and Calabria) do not laugh just as heartily at Godfather impersonations or speech patterns mimicking Italians attempting to master English.

It's too bad that Scaramucci was given the bum's rush - but deservedly so - from the West Wing. Very, very few Italians (are there any others?) have ever received mail there.

Perhaps someday there will be an Italian in the West Wing as a mover/shaker for some president, higher than Minority Leader of the House Nancy Pelosi, or even in the oval office itself.

But until that time we Italians and even those of us who are part Italian take some pride in recalling the local political accomplishments of Menino, Cellucci, and Volpe.

Before I worked at Northeastern, I had a job as a medical assistant in Brighton. I left because I was paid differently and treated differently as a Puerto Rican woman because my English wasn't as good as my co-workers. I now work at Northeastern full-time, but I still live in low-income housing. I am on the Mass Health Connector. I pay for insurance that provides me with less coverage than I need because I cannot afford anything more than that.

I am sharing my story, but my story echoes the lives of many food service workers on campus that cannot live on a Northeastern salary. Hundreds of food service workers who feed Northeastern's students need public assistance like low-income housing, Mass Health and food stamps to get by.

Last year, Harvard food service workers fought and won big. They have helped inspire us at Northeastern to fight for more. We know our work and our lives have value. We are asking for a guaranteed salary of $35,000 a year for full-time work, the median income in Boston. We put genuine care into the food we make and the service we provide. I'm proud to work at Northeastern and I thank all the students and professors who have stood by us. But, there is no pride in an institution with millions keeping its workers stuck on public assistance and trapped in poverty.

My mother raised my three sisters and me by herself. She is now disabled and I help her with the bills whenever I can. I want to buy a house for her. I want to give her a more stable life in our own place. I see Boston as my home. I don't want to start from zero somewhere else.

We hope the city of Boston will support us this fall as we ask Northeastern to change Boston for the better. Our work and our lives matter to the Northeastern community and the city at large, and we are prepared to prove it.
